COVID-Era Law Grads Remain Highly Mobile

The second class of law students to graduate during the COVID-19 pandemic has been nearly as mobile as the first, according to a new report from the National Association for Law Placement and the NALP Foundation.

In an annual study of recent graduates' employment status, mobility and compensation, 65% of the 1,235 class of 2021 alumni surveyed have already changed jobs at least once since graduation. That's down slightly from 70% of class of 2020 alumni, which the two organizations surveyed last year. Meanwhile, 13% of recent graduates are looking for a new role, the same percentage as last year.

When asked to reflect on how their career plans changed while they were in law school, 42% of graduates said their career intentions changed during law school, and 46% of those who did change their career intention did so during or immediately after their 2L

"Changing interests" was the top reason for law students' career intention shifts, identified by 62% of those who made a shift. Compensation was a factor in 38% of such shifts.

Meanwhile, hybrid work schedules became more prevalent. They were identified among 57% of respondents for the class of 2021, up from 54% for the class of 2020. Three days per week was the most popular attendance policy among hybrid workers and hybrid work was more popular among larger firms, NALP stated.

The survey also asked class of 2021 alumni about job satisfaction as it related to their working situation, but reported no significant differences in lawyer satisfaction between fully remote, fully in-person and hybrid workers. However, hybrid workers edged out fully

Deal Watch: How Private Equity Dealmakers View The Second Half of 2025

Private equity deals are up by 28.7% for value year to date, according to Pitchbook, thanks to a surge in megadeals. And while deal count for M&A overall is down, private equity deals are up 8.2% year over year, with at least 4,429 transactions in the Private equity dealmakers would still benefit from a "finely balanced environment with clear trade policy, stable commodity and energy costs, subdued inflation and declining interest rates," the Pitchbook report says, but adding that these conditions are "somewhat aspirational.'

A more likely scenario, the report suggests, is a "sideways" market in which valuations move slightly up and down, "moderate, tariff-driven inflation" will continue, a "deceleration in growth" and "persistent uncertainty in the market" will become pervasive. None of which sounds overly positive.

According to Steve Epstein, managing partner at Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver & Jacobson and co-head of the firm's M&A and private equity practice, that finely balanced environment would require several factors to align.

"The deal market is not correlated to one indicator," he said via email. "Rather, transaction planners analyze a mosaic of factors, including geopolitical risks, consumer confidence, cost of capital, and the current trade and regulatory environment, to assess whether to transact."

And while that analysis can, of course, be made, without several of the factors Epstein references lining up, the chance for a big second half seems low.

"We remain cautiously optimistic about the second half of the year," he said. "However, a meaningful uptick in the number of transactions will require several factors to fall in place."

While the economic environment must and always does change, the U.S. trade war-which now includes letters sent to trading partners, according to Truth the White House that resulted in him becoming acting U.S. attorney.

That appointment means Sarcone, the Trump administration's choice to lead the Albany-based federal prosecutor's office, will stay in that role for the 32-county district.

At midnight Monday, Sarcone lost his 120-day job as "interim" U.S. attorney, after the Board of Judges for the Northern District of New York declined to exercise their discretion to keep him on indefinitely, or make their own selection.

As of Tuesday, Sarcone was named to the role of first deputy assistant U.S. attorney.

With the U.S. attorney seat now vacant, Sarcone said U.Š. Attorney General Pamela Bondi appointed him special assistant U.S. attorney.

"Because there's no U.S. attorney in place, I became 'acting' U.S. attorney for an indefinite term," Sarcone told the Law Journal, adding that he has "all the powers of the U.S. attorney."

FORTY-NINE attorneys general secured a $202 million settlement from Gilead Sciences Inc., resolving allegations of an illegal kickback scheme to promote the company's HIV medications.

The attorneys general, including from California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Washington D.C., claimed biopharmaceutical company Gilead violated federal anti-kickback laws from January 2011 to November 2017.

Gilead was accused of illegally providing incentives like awards, meals and travel expenses to health care providers to encourage them to prescribe the company's medications.

Gilead admitted, acknowledged and accepted responsibility for conduct involving its marketing of its drugs through HIV Speaker Programs. The company paid 548 health care providers to serve as speakers, includ-

Second Circuit Judges At Odds Over Impact Of 'Structural Error' in Criminal Threats Case

BY EMILY SAUL

IT REMAINS an open question whether or not a structural error must implicate a defendant's constitutional rights, a federal appeals court in New York stated on Monday in denying a request to rehear the appeal of a man convicted of sending interstate threats.

By a narrow majority, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit declined to grant en banc review for Rickey Johnson. Johnson's 2022 guilty verdict was returned by an eleven-person panel in the Southern District of New York.

On appeal, Johnson's counsel argued that the District court violated Rule 23(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure by allowing an eleven-member jury to proceed pre-deliberation and over defense objection. That violation constituted a structural error, Colleen Cassidy of the Federal Defenders of New York asserted.

The Second Circuit last year declined to disturb the conviction. That opinion, authored by U.S. Circuit Court Judge Steven Menashi, found that the right to a 12-person jury is not a constitutional right, a structural error must be an error that violates a constitutional right, and that the conviction of Johnson was harmless error.

While the majority of the 13 participating judges agreed on Monday not to rehear the case, there was no agreement on whether a structural error must implicate constitutional rights.

That question, U.S. Circuit Court Judge Raymond Lohier wrote, remains "an open one in this Circuit because the panel opinion's statements bearing on

Crisis Consultant Escapes Blake Lively's Suit on Jurisdictional Grounds

BY ALYSSA AQUINO

A CRISIS consultant hired by Justin Baldoni escaped claims from his "It Ends With Us" co-star, Blake Lively, of using a digital army to attack the actress online, after a New York federal court ruled that the suit lacked little connection to New York.

U.S. District Judge Lewis Liman dismissed Lively's claims against Jed Wallace and his crisis consulting firm, Street Relations Inc., saying that Wallace "cannot be forced to defend this lawsuit in New York" when he lives in Texas and isn't accused of misconduct that occurred in New York.

"The alleged negative publicity campaign against Lively largely took place outside of New York. The few alleged actions targeting New York were taken by others, and there are no allegations suggesting the Wallace Defendants were aware of them," Liman said in a decision released late Tuesday.

More Power for Trump After Supreme Court Ruling

BY CHARLES TOUTANT

WASHINGTON, D.C.

MONDAY'S order from the U.S. Supreme Court, allowing the Department of Education to proceed with mass layoffs is notable for its expansion of presidential power, one legal observer said.

The justices gave the Trump administration a green light in McMahon v. New York to conduct large-scale reductions in the force, or RIF, at the Department of Education. The court said it would allow a RIF of nearly 1,400 employees at the department, which has become a top target of the Trump administration.

The ruling represents additional evidence of the Roberts Court's inexorable move towards a unitary theory of the executive branch, which posits that the president should be able to control the exercise of all executive power and can remove any executive branch official, said Michael J. Gearhardt, Burton Craige Distinguished Professor of Jurisprudence at the University of North Carolina School of Law.

"That will allow the president to have even greater authority than the president's ever had in American history until now," Gearhardt

"I think this case will stand as another step in the direction of embracing the unitary theory of the executive, but it also fits another pattern which which, to me, is very disturbing, and that is that the court is very sympathetic to Republican presidents and not to Democratic ones," Gearhardt added. "So when Biden was in office, for example, the Roberts Court blocked it and said there were things he couldn't do. We are still waiting for the Supreme Court to say there's something Trump can't do.'

The ruling gives Trump yet another green light, Gearhardt said—"and what is striking about that, in part, is that the Trump administration has lost more than 90% of the cases litigated in lower courts. It has won more than 90% of the time in the Supreme Court." "We've never had a time period in which there has been this kind of dissonance or disconnection between lower courts and the Supreme Court," he said.

"The thing to be concerned about is how each of these Supreme Court decisions rewrites separation of powers. Apparently, it's all about the presidency. The framers created a system of equal branches, not a system in which one branch proves to be dominant," Gerhardt said. "It's just troubling.'

No Case Law, No Analysis

The majority's bare-bones order makes it difficult to say whether the ruling was legally sound, said Brittany Forrester, a labor and employment lawyer at Tully Rinckey in Ladera Ranch, California.

"It's tough to analyze it from a legal perspective, because we don't know where their legal perspective is in issuing the decision. They give us no case law, no analysis to support their decision," Forrester said.

The court's terse order stands in sharp contrast with the 19 page dissenting opinion, written by Justice Sonia Sotomayor and joined by justices Elana Kagan and Ketanji

Brown Jackson. The dissent said the large-scale layoffs amount to a dissolution of the Department of Education, and only Congress has authority to take such a move. The majority appears to think the president, as the head of the executive branch, has the ultimate authority to make decisions about staffing levels, Forrester said.

"I think they're hanging their hat on that and really not providing any other analysis, whereas the opposing side is basically arguing and saying that it's an overarching, overreaching power, a breach of separation of powers between Congress, who makes the laws, and the executive branch, who carries out the law," Forrester said.

While the Trump administration has already been making big cuts to the federal payroll, those facing the knife have been largely probationary employees, whose rights to appeal are limited.

But the Supreme Court ruling will likely embolden the administration to make cuts to the ranks of workers who are past their probationary period, Forrester said.

For individuals targeted by the job cuts, the Department of Education still has to follow certain rules for carrying out the cuts, and a court might deem the reduction in force unlawful if the proper protocol is not followed, Forrester said. The ruling could point to an easier time for other large-scale job cuts such as those at the U.S. Agency for International Development she said.

Sarah Hartley, co-chair of the higher education team at Bryan Cave Leighton Paisner in Washington, said the mass layoffs at the Department of Education raise questions about whether it will be successful to return educational management to the states.

The Encore Era: Why Retired GCs Are Returning to the C-Suite

BY TRUDY KNOCKLESS

LATELY, some of the nation's most prominent general counsel are retiring, only to find themselves lured back into the fray-not for the paycheck but for the thrill of it all.

After Don Liu retired last August as chief legal and compliance officer of Target, he settled comfortably into a routine of travel, exercise, light mentoring and board service. He rejected multiple job overtures, but then one landed on his desk he couldn't set aside: leading legal for a company based partly in London and partly in Dublin in the fast-growing sportsgambling industry.

In April, he joined the company, Flutter, parent of online sports-betting juggernaut FanDuel, as chief

"It was just too compelling," said Liu, 63. "The thing that really got me over the hump ... was the fact that the industry was fascinating. It was the making the difference that got me really excited."

Liu is far from alone. In February, New York-based Sirius XM lured 67-year-old Richard Baer off the sidelines, appointing him general counsel. Two years earlier, Baer had retired as chief legal officer of Airbnb. Earlier, he'd been legal chief of Liberty Media and United-Health Group.

And in February, Jill Marchant retired from Hallmark after seven years as legal chief, only to become chief legal and administrative officer of beverage chain Swig two months later. The 59-year-old, who is also a former general counsel of Texas Roadhouse, said at the time that she believed she had something to offer 15-year-old Swig. "It is thrilling at this phase of my career to bring my knowledge of what makes a great brand, a great business and a great culture to Swig, and to be part of building on its rapid growth and success," she said.

Michael Sachs, an in-house recruiter at Major, Lindsey & Africa, said he isn't surprised retired GCs are boomeranging back into the workforce.

"I've never met a general counsel who hasn't loved being a general counsel," he said. "When they get that call again to be a general counsel, they're going to take that call nine out of 10 times.'

John Gilmore, managing partner of the legal search firm BarkerGilm-ore, added that retired GCs are "not driven as much by the money anymore. They've already been very successful. It's a challenge—and some people like to play golf, and others like to run law departments and be strategic partners.

If It Sings to You, Go Ahead and Do It

That affection for the position played a role in Brad Lerman's decision to come out of retirement in April 2023 to serve as chief legal officer of Starbucks. He'd served as general counsel of Medtronic for nearly eight years before hitting the company's mandatory retirement age of 65 and exiting in January

"If it had been any other company other than Starbucks, I think I would've continued to say no," said Lerman, now 69. "But the company resonates with me. It has such a rich history, and it was an opportunity to do something completely different.'

He and his wife, who is also a lawyer, consulted their five adult children. "One of my sons asked, 'Dad, do you need the money?' And I said, 'No, that's not really what it's about." They said, 'If it sings to you, go ahead and do it."

Lerman's time at Starbucks has been anything but serene. Just four months after he started, the board fired CEO Laxman Narasimhan after less than a year on the job and hired Chipotle CEO Brian Niccol to succeed him. The stretch also has been marked by strife with activist shareholders and with store workers seeking to unionize. "It has not been easy. It's been real, and we've been doing some hard work," he said.

What do legal chiefs in the twilight of their careers offer companies? "It's experience, maturity, judgment," Lerman said. "What you always want from your general counsel is a steady hand. When an airplane flies through turbulence, you want the pilot to say, 'We're going through turbulence now. It will be fine.' You don't want that pilot screaming, 'Oh, my gosh, it's so turbulent up here.

For Lerman, returning to a legal chief role wasn't about repeating the past. It was about continuing

"If you think you've learned it all and you're going to open up the playbook and just impose it on the company, that's not going to work," he said. "When I got to Starbucks, what was exciting was learning the business and figuring out how my skill set could grow and fit into where the company was going."

He added: "I thought I was experienced when I left Medtronic. I'm much better today than I was then. You see different ways things are done, you meet different executives, you're exposed to new ideas. You've got to be open to learning

Lerman soon will be giving up the legal reins at Starbucks. The company disclosed in June that he'll be departing in the coming months, but didn't provide a firm timetable. Lerman said he's planning to retire for good, though he acknowledged that was also the plan when he left Medtronic. "Never say never," he guipped.

Similarly, Richard Baer thought ne'd wrapped up his career as a legal chief when he checked out of Airbnb in December 2023. But then Patrick Donnelly retired from Sirius XM at age 63 after 27 years as GC.

'I Failed at Retirement'

Baer knew the satellite radio company well. During Baer's six years as chief legal officer of Liberty Media, Liberty amassed majority control of the business, a position it maintained until splitting off Sirius XM into a separate, stand-alone public company in 2024. The allure was three-fold, Baer said: "A great company, a great product and a great team." On Feb. 18, Baer broke the news to his LinkedIn connections. "I failed at retirement," he wrote, before posting a link to the Sirius XM press release announcing his hiring.

In an interview with Law.com. Baer said, "Boards value

Robert Josefsberg, Brooklyn-Born Florida Lawyer Who Defended Jim Morrison, Dies at 86

BY MICHAEL A. MORA

ROBERT "Bob" Josefsberg, a towering figure in South Florida's legal community whose courtroom tenacity was matched only by his insistence on civility, died on Monday from a heart attack while conducting a deposition with his grandson by his side. He was 86 vears old. A senior partner at the litigation boutique Podhurst Orseck, Josefsberg came of age professionally as Miami transformed from a quiet Southern city into an international legal hub. His legal career spanned over six decades, from the courtroom defense of rock star Jim Morrison to high-stakes litigation involving fraud and commercial

"Bob was my very close friend for over 60 years," said Aaron Podhurst, a founding partner of Podhurst Orseck. "I practiced law with him for 40 years. He was loved by everybody, he was a great friend, and he can never be replaced."

Josefsberg, born in Brooklyn, New York, and educated at Dartmouth College and Yale Law School, was admitted to the Florida Bar in 1962. Josefsberg, who briefly served as an assistant U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Florida, was still a young lawyer when he took on one of his most famous clients: The Doors frontman, Jim Morrison, charged with public drunkenness and lewd behavior after a raucous Miami concert in the 1960s.

Jurors returned an acquittal on the charge of lascivious behavior and drunkenness, but found Morrison guilty of indecent exposure and open profanity. The Miami-Dade

Circuit Court sentenced Morrison to six months in prison and a $500 fine. Josefsberg later critiqued the verdict as more about local cultural sensibilities than the law itself.

"Not that I'm saying dropping your pants in public is acceptable," Josefsberg told the New York Times in 2010. "It's not. It's also not the worst thing in the world that ever happened.

When asked whether Morrison, who died in 1971 while the case was still on appeal, might have ever qualified for clemency, which essentially depends on what the person has done since the conviction and how societal laws have changed, Josefsberg was characteristically blunt. "Jim's a total loser, in terms of rehabilitation and what he's done. He's shown no remorse, no sorrow.'

Morrison was posthumously pardoned by Florida officials in Josefsberg litigated before the U.S. Supreme Court soon afterwards and cemented his reputation as a fierce litigator over the next several decades. He continued to have high-profile clients, such as Florida Gov. Bob Graham, with whom Josefsberg worked as his general counsel, and high-rolling corporate executives, some of whom were based in Los Angeles.

Yet, it was in private practice at Podhurst where Josefsberg found his professional home, and specialized in white-collar and commercial litigation. Peter Prieto, a partner at Podhurst, recalled that as a federal prosecutor, he tried a case against Josefsberg, one of the top criminal defense lawyers in town. "After the trial was over, he invited me to lunch and introduced me to a group of lawyers. He was why I ended up at Podhurst," Prieto said. "There are very few lawyers in this town who are as beloved as Bob. You can count them on one hand—maybe.'

At the same time, Josefsberg racked up distinctions, such as the Florida Bar Foundation's Medal of Honor, the Florida Bar Tobias Simon Pro Bono Service Award, and the Dade County Bar's David Dyer

Professionalism Award. Josefsberg also held leadership roles in multiple legal and civic organizations, including the International Academy of Trial Lawvers, and was an advocate for civility and professionalism. Notably, his article on "Civility" was published in over 20 legal journals and remains widely cited.

Javier Lopez, a shareholder at Veddar Price, observed that for the legends in the South Florida legal community, Josefsberg was their mentor. But the phrase "don't mistake my kindness for weakness" was appropriate for him.

"He was always a gentleman," Lopez said. "But for as kind as he was, don't get it mixed up because he would eat you up at trial. He was an absolute bulldog when it came to being a trial lawyer. He wasn't somebody who litigated cases up until trial and then handed them off. Lots of litigators are not trial lawvers—but he was.'

Josefsberg is survived by his beloved wife Marlene; his children Amy, Kenny, Karen, and David; and their spouses. Together, he and Marlene were the proud grandparents of 12 grandchildren, all of whom brought him tremendous pride and joy.

TAX LITIGATION ISSUES

Tax Regulations One Year After 'Loper Bright'

or 40 years, Chevron, U.S.A., v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc. et al., 467 U.S. 837 (1984), required federal courts to defer to an administrative agency's reasonable interpretation of an ambiguous statutory provision, even if the court would have interpreted the statute differently.

Last year, in Loper Bright Enterprises et al. v. Raimondo, et al., 603 U.S. 369 (2024), the Supreme Court overruled Chevron and empowered courts faced with statutory ambiguity to "use every tool at their disposal to determine the best reading of the statute and resolve the ambiguity." Loper Bright, 603 U.S. at 400.

The Loper Bright majority articulated three limiting principles to be applied in reviewing administrative agency actions.

First, the court made clear that it was not overruling cases that relied on the Chevron framework, and that "[t]he holdings of those cases that specific agency actions are lawful ... are still subject to statutory stare decisis." Loper Bright. 603 U.S. at 412.

Second, the court reaffirmed the approach established in Skidmore v. Swift & Co., 323 U.S. 134 (1944), which treats agency interpretations as non-binding guidance that will be entitled to deference to the extent the reviewing court finds the agency's reasoning to be persuasive. Loper Bright, 603 U.S. at

Third, the majority noted that "when a particular statute delegates authority to an agency consistent with constitutional limits, courts must respect the delegation, while ensuring that the agency acts within it." Loper Bright, 603 U.S. at

In the past year, at least a dozen cases have considered challenges to IRS actions based on Loper Bright. An IRS revenue agent investigated the claim and, while determining that the deposits had been properly treated, concluded that the development group had improperly deducted an intercompany bad debt.

Application of 'Loper Bright' Limiting Principles

Cases upholding IRS regulations have relied on each of the limiting principles identified by the court in Loper Bright.

For example, in Weston v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 2025-16 (Feb. 12, 2025), the taxpayers challenged a regulation that barred theft loss deductions so long as there was a reasonable prospect of recovery, as inconsistent with Section 165(e), which provides that "any loss arising from theft shall be treated as sustained during the taxable year in which the taxpayer discovers such loss.'

In rejecting the taxpayer's argument, the Tax Court noted that it had previously upheld the regulation and "reiterate[d] that ... Treasury Regulation §1.165-1(d)(3) is the best interpretation of section 165(e)." Weston, T.C. Memo 2025-16, at *14 (citing Ramsay Scarlett & Co. v. Commissioner, 61 T.C. 795, 810-11 (1974), aff'd, 521 F.2d 786 (4th Cir. 1975)).

The court further noted that Loper Bright did not "call into question prior cases...[and] [t]he holdings of those cases that specific agency actions are lawful...are still subject to statutory stare decisis despite [the Supreme Court's] change in interpretive methodology." Weston, T.C. Memo 2025-16, at *14 n.6 (quoting Loper Bright, 144 S. Ct. at 2273).

In Lissack v. Commissioner, 125 F.4th 245 (5th Cir. 2025), the court relied on Skidmore deference to reject a challenge to the denial of a whistleblower claim. The plaintiff in Lissack had provided information that a condominium development group was evading taxes through its treatment of golf membership deposits.

An IRS revenue agent investigated the claim and, while determining that the deposits had been properly treated, concluded that the development group had improperly deducted an intercompany bad debt.

The IRS decided that Lissack was not entitled to an award since the issue giving rise to the adjustment was insufficiently related to the information provided under the applicable regulation.

The Tax Court rejected Lissack's claim, and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed, concluding that the regulation was a reasonable interpretation of the statute under Chevron. Lissack v. Commissioner, 68 F.4th 1312, 1321-22 (5th Cir. 2023).

On reconsideration following Loper Bright, the Fifth Circuit "assess[ed] the persuasive value of [the IRS's] interpretation under Skidmore based on 'the thoroughness evident in its consideration, the validity of its reasoning, its consistency with earlier and later pronouncements, and all those factors which give it power to persuade, if lacking power to control.'

The court then concluded that the IRS's definition of "'related action' makes good

New Zealand Bans Crypto ATMs: What Are Other Countries Doing?

n a bold move to combat financial crime, New Zealand has become the latest country to ban cryptocurrency ATMs (also known as Bitcoin ATMs), citing their use in money laundering and illicit finance.

This decision, announced in July 2025, is part of a broader overhaul of the country's Anti-Money Laundering and Countering the Financing of Terrorism (AML/CFT) regime.

The move underscores a growing international trend: regulators are increasingly scrutinizing the cash-to-crypto pipeline, viewing it as a significant vulnerability for illicit finance.

While the ban has sparked debate within the crypto community, it also offers a valuable case study in how jurisdictions are grappling with the intersection of digital assets and financial regulation.

The Rationale Behind New Zealand's Ban

New Zealand's Associate Justice Minister Nicole McKee framed the ban as a necessary step to target criminals' ability to launder money, while maintaining a competitive environment for legitimate busi-

The government cited evidence from law enforcement that crypto ATMs were being exploited by drug traffickers and organized crime groups to convert illicit cash into untraceable digital assets.

At the time of the announcement, New Zealand had approximately 157 crypto ATMs in operation. These machines allowed users to buy or sell cryptocurrency using cash or debit cards, often with minimal identity verification.

The appeal of crypto ATMs for illicit actors is obvious. They offer a seemingly anonymous and rapid method to convert physical cash, possibly derived from criminal activities, into digital assets that can then be swiftly transferred across borders, making them difficult to trace.

DAVID ZASLOWSKY is a partner in the New York office of Baker McKenzie and the editor of the firm's Blockchain Blog. David Zaslowsky

While legitimate users exist, the ease with which these machines can be exploited by criminals for layering illicit funds and thereby bypassing traditional banking scrutiny is what put them squarely in the crosshairs of the New Zealand regulators (and other global financial watchdogs).

The ATM ban is accompanied by a new NZD 5,000 (about USD 3000) cap on international cash transfers and expanded powers for the Financial Intelligence Unit (FIU) to collect data from financial institutions. These reforms aim to modernize New Zealand's AML/ CFT framework in response to the evolving digital finance landscape.

Japan was one of the first major economies to classify cryptocurrencies as legal payment methods, and it has a licensing system for crypto ATM operators regulated by the Financial Services Agency.

Crypto ATMs: A Global Regulatory Patchwork

New Zealand's decision is not an isolated incident but rather a significant ripple in a larger global tide of tightening regulations around crypto ATMs. As jurisdictions around the world grapple with the same challenges, they are finding different solutions—from full prohibition to regulated integration into the financial system. The United States is home to over 30,000 crypto ATMs—by far the largest number globally. Rather than banning them, U.S. regulators have opted for a compliance-based approach.

Operators must register with the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) and implement AML and Know Your Customer (KYC) programs. Some states, like Illinois and Washington, have introduced additional restrictions, including transaction caps and mandatory consumer disclosures.

In Spokane, Washington, local authorities went a step further in June 2025 by banning crypto ATMs entirely after a surge in scams targeting vulnerable residents. However, this remains an exception rather than the rule.

The UK has taken a strict stance on the regulation of crypto ATMs, with the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) implementing stringent rules and enforcement actions. In 2025, an individual was sentenced to four years in prison for unlawfully operating multiple machines that processed over $2.6 million in transactions.

The FCA has warned consumers that using these machines could mean "handing your money over to criminals." While not a legislative ban, the UK's enforcement-first approach has effectively eliminated crypto ATMs from the market. In 2025, the FCA declared that no crypto ATM operators are legally registered at the current time.

The European Union (EU) Markets in Crypto-Assets (MiCA) Regulation, which came into force in late 2024, aims to harmonize rules across the EU and address concerns related to money laundering, fraud, and financial stability in the crypto

By Sept. 2025, crypto ATMs will be subject to AML/CFT requirements. including customer identification and transaction monitoring. This, no ban, but strict compliance approach, reflects the EU's broader strategy of integrating crypto into the financial system while mitigating risks through standardized compliance obligations.

In the Asia-Pacific region, regulatory responses vary widely. In response to a surge in crypto ATMrelated scams and illicit activities, the Australian Transaction Reports and Analysis Centre (AUSTRAC) recently implemented stricter regulations on crypto ATM operators.

IN BRIEF

Social posts this week—shows no signs of abating. Inflation in the U.S., in large part due to the tariffs enacted by the U.S. on trading partners, is ticking up.

Looking at other economic factors, attempts to stop the violence in Gaza and the humanitarian fallout from the conflict have stalled. And a near-term endgame on the Ukraine/Russia war seems unlikely.

Dealmakers always seem to find the silver linings, and their ability to devise creative solutions that foster common ground is strong. But the current environment has several obstacles for dealmakers to overcome.

Looking at announced M&A deals, there were six transactions over $1 billion in the past week, including two megadeals. Kirkland & Ellis and Latham & Watkins both worked on multiple charted deals. There was at least one new SPAC, seven new IPOs (several of which came out of China), and at least 10 debt offerings over $500 million.

Federal Court Invalidates Reproductive Health Privacy Rule

n June 18, 2025, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas issued a landmark decision invalidating nearly all of the 2024 amendments to the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA Privacy Rule). The Reproductive Health Privacy Rule, which went into effective late last year, was designed to limit disclosures of reproductive health information.

In Purl v. United States Department of Health and Human Services, the court concluded that the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) exceeded its statutory authority. This decision, which applies nationwide, essentially eliminates the enhanced federal privacy protection for reproductive health care information. However, it is important to note that certain regulated entities are still required to comply with applicable state privacy and consumer laws regarding the disclosure of reproductive health care information.

The Reproductive Health Privacy Rule: An Overview

The rule broadly protected data related to abortion, IVF, contraception and gender-affirming care in the wake of Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization. Key provisions included:

- Prohibiting the use or disclosure of reproductive health information for investigations regarding or imposing liability on any person for seeking, obtaining, providing or facilitating lawful reproductive health care.
- Requiring pre-disclosure attestations to ensure information would not be used for prohibited purposes.
- Defining terms like "reproductive health care" and adjusting related HIPAA compliance obligations.

LISA RIPPEY is of counsel at Stinson, LLP. ELENA HUMPHREY is an associate

Elena

These changes imposed new compliance burdens on covered entities and business associates, particularly those operating in politically polarized or multijurisdictional environments. Legal challenges quickly followed.

The court held that HHS lacked authority to regulate politically and morally significant issues, such as abortion and genderaffirming care, without explicit congressional approval.

The 'Purl' Ruling: A Judicial Reversal With Nationwide Impact

In Purl, a Texas physician and her practice argued that the rule unlawfully interfered with state child abuse reporting laws, improperly rewrote statutory terms and violated the "major questions doctrine" by regulating politically significant areas without clear congressional authorization. The court sided with the plaintiffs, offering three primary justifications:

1. Conflict with State Laws: The rule improperly limited state child abuse reporting laws by prohibiting disclosures based solely on lawful reproductive health care and imposing complex attestation requirements. 2. Impermissible Redefinitions: The rule's new definitions of "person" (excluding unborn humans) and "public health" conflicted with federal law, exceeding HHS's authority.

3. Major Questions Doctrine: Citing Dobbs and the principle of federalism, the court held that HHS lacked authority to regulate politically and morally significant issues, such as abortion and gender-affirming care, without explicit congressional approval.

Strategic Compliance Considerations for State Laws

Despite the Reproductive Health Privacy Rule's vacatur, the original HIPAA Privacy Rule and its protections remain intact, though legal uncertainty and new compliance considerations remain for HIPAAcovered entities.

Following the Dobbs decision, many states enacted their own privacy and consumer protection laws that may impose additional or stricter obligations on covered entities when handling reproductive healthcare information, which may exceed federal HIPAA requirements. For example, California recently amended its Confidentiality of Medical Information Act to restrict the disclosure of abortionrelated information by healthcare providers, health plans, contractors and employers in certain situ-

Similar laws have been adopted or proposed in Washington, Nevada, New York and Virginia.

In contrast, other states, such as Texas may have fewer restrictions, meaning that covered entities need only comply with existing HIPAA requirements. Covered entities with employees in multiple jurisdictions may face conflicting reporting and disclosure obligations and must carefully navigate these differences to ensure compliance.

The court's ruling increases the legal risk from both state officials and private individuals. Covered entities may be subpoenaed to produce reproductive health information in states with conflicting protection laws. These entities must carefully analyze the requirements of each state and determine whether such information must be provided or is restricted from being provided under any law in order to limit their risk of litigation.

of President Trump and Attorney General Pam Bondi," Sarcone said. He also expressed gratitude to the Board of Judges, by declining to put someone else in the "The whole statute, the way it's designed is awkward and it's backwards and the judicial and executive branches should never be in each others' lane," Sarcone He said that his recent meeting with the Board of Judges was an awkward for both parties.

"It presents a scenario of a potential conflict," Sarcone said. "I just wish that they did it sooner, so I didn't have to go through all of the stress and strain of feeling like I was being interviewed—like when you're interviewed to save vour job.'

"I'm happy to be here and continuing in this role indefinitely,"

Carl W. Tobias, professor at the University of Richmond School of Law, described it as "circumvent step process," and he raised a number of questions about the approach to keeping Sarcone in the job.

"I don't think the label is maybe that important, but I read [28 USC] 515] and I don't think it really anticipates what has just happened," said Tobias, who noted that while Sarcone's appointment is indefinite, he's subject to being fired without cause by the Department "It's indefinite but subject

"I'm grateful for the support to Pam Bondi's whim," the law professor said. "I think this is all peculiar and not necessarily the way that Congress anticipated this Vacancy Reform Act would work. I have real questions about whether what has happened is appropriate in terms of Congress's intent here."

More broadly, Tobias is monitoring how the federal administration is tending to not allow their selections for U.S. attorney to go through the Senate advice and consent process, given that they would be blocked by Democrats. Five presidential nominees are planned to go before the Senate Judiciary on Thursday, with all but one of them considered noncontroversial.

"They have not formally nominated U.S. attorneys for more than 20 or 30 districts around the country, out of 90-plus possibilities," Tobias said. "They're using 'actings' and 'interims' in a number of districts, which is defensible if you're in as big a hurry as they seem to be. Though we're in July and we haven't seen one confirmed

Tobias said he's worried about the Executive Branch cutting the Senate out of its constitutional role. He made a call for the Senate to do something, because he said litigation would be time-consuming, and he wouldn't know who'd have standing to sue.

"I just wish the Senate would do something," Tobias asserted. Because I think the Senate could do something and say, 'Enough. These need to come to us and not be chopped up in the way that this has the effect.' But it's not my place to tell Trump or Bondi how to run a Justice Department. They're not asking me.

If the appointment of a U.S. attorney is cloudy, Tobias said it seems to him that criminal defense counsel could argue that a prosecution is invalid.

'That's a very technical argument. But defense counsel, under the Constitution, will do anything they can to help the client and that's their duty under the law. have seen this happen—that there's some kind of technicality that prevents a prosecution that would otherwise stand up from working. And so I am concerned about that. That would waste a lot of time and frustrate everybody in court system if that were to happen. I'm not saying it will, but it could," Tobias said.

In his own concurrence, Menashi said that the determination was incorrect.

"This order denying rehearing en banc features the spectacle of judges simultaneously concurring and dissenting in the same case with respect to the same result," the judge wrote. "Normally, a concurrence or a dissent provides reasons supporting or opposing the disposition of the court. Here, judges who disagree about the result focus on whether Johnson's holding can be dismissed as dicta. But the opinions do not even agree on the reasoning for that specific

"The conclusion of Johnson that structural errors must be constitutional errors was necessary to the judgment and therefore a holding of the court," Menashi continued. "It bears emphasizing that—contrary to the suggestions of the other opinions—this holding of Johnson reflects the majority view among the appellate courts. Because the active judges of the Second Circuit have declined to reconsider that holding, it remains binding."

In September, the Circuit cited the U.S. Supreme Court's 1970 decision in Williams v. Florida, which held the Sixth Amendment right to a jury trial does not mandate exactly 12 jurors. Changes in federal rules in 1983 showed the Supreme Court no longer viewed a 12-person jury as a "substantial right," read the opinion. Therefore, an eleven-person jury cannot be a structural error, according to the ruling.

But in a dissent in the en banc matter, authored by U.S. Circuit Judge Sarah Merriam, said the reduction of a jury to eleven people over defense objections is struc-

"Some trial errors can never be harmless," Merriam contended, joined by four others. "Some errors so infect the conduct of a trial, or the determination of a verdict, that they require a clean slate, and a new trial, to protect the defendant's essential rights. Such errors are structural - that is, they alter and undermine the very structure of a criminal trial."

"The right to a jury of twelve is firmly entrenched in our history, and the improper dismissal of even one juror impacts the outcome of a trial in systemic ways that cannot be accurately predicted in advance or assessed in retrospect," she

U.S. Circuit Judge Denny Chin, in his own dissent, notes that Williams is dissimilar from Johnson in that Williams involved state criminal proceedings in Florida, where six-person juries are permitted in non-capital cases. Chen authored the 2024 dissent in the Johnson's right to a 12-person jury was violated, stated Chin, who authored the 2024 dissent.

"In these en banc polls where members of the Court debate whether 'questions of exceptional importance' are presented...we must not lose sight of the impact our rulings have on the individuals involved," Chin concluded. "Even if it is not likely that the error that occurred in this case will recur with any frequency, Johnson still bears the burden of the collateral consequences that come with three felony convictions."

Cassidy said she would be filing a petition for certiorari.

Johnson is accused of threatening to kill Fox News hosts Greg Gutfeld and Laura Ingraham, former U.S. Sen. Joe Manchin, D-West Virginia, and U.S. Rep. Lauren Boebert, R-Colorado. The case was tried before U.S. District Court Judge Lewis Kaplan.

The fast food industry has been rapidly consolidating, and Inspire has been one of its most aggressive buyers. The company didn't even exist until 2018, when it formed via Arby's acquisition of Buffalo Wild Wings.

The Roark Capital-backed company bought Sonic later in 2018 for $2.3 billion. It then purchased Jimmy John's for an undisclosed price in 2019 and Dunkin' Donuts (and its sister brand Baskin-Robbins) for $11.3 billion in 2020.

Inspire's chains operate 32,000 restaurants globally compared with Yum's 61,000.

CORPORATE SECURITIES

Shades of Madoff! Could It Happen Again?

flurry of financial legislation has passed Congress this year (or is now pending), despite serious misgivings by members on both sides of the aisle.

Most of the attention has focused on President Donald Trump's "Big Beautiful Bill" which is now law, but another pending bill—known as the Genius Act—may pose even greater problems. The Genius Act waltzed through the Senate by a vote of 68 to 30, and similar (but not identical) legislation is now under consideration in the House of Representatives.

Both bills have significant Democratic support, so something is likely to emerge this term.

The question this column will pose is simple: in this rush to enactment, is there a risk that new legislation could satisfy all the conditions for another Madoff-like financial collapse that blindsides everyone?

This column will start from the premise that a true mega-crisis usually starts within a field thought to be safe, dull and conventional. Thus, in 2008, no one worried (at least, enough) about home mortgages, because it was assumed that home owners would do anything before defaulting on their mortgages.

Similarly, in the dangerous world of cryptos, the relatively safest instrument might seem to be the "payment stablecoin."

Under the Genius Act, payment stablecoins will be defined as "digital assets" designed to be "used as a means of payment or settlement," where the issuer (a) is obligated to convert, redeem, or repurchase for a fixed amount of monetary value and (b) represents that such issuer will maintain a stable value relative to the value of a fixed amount of monetary value.

Let's be clear: this is a legitimate goal, and payment stablecoins have real functional utility.

Unlike many crypto instruments (which used to be securities in the SEC's view), such an instrument does not simply facilitate money laundering, but allows companies (particularly foreign companies) to hedge the risk that changes in currency values could render them unable to pay a debt in dollars or Euros where they earn much of their revenues in a volatile local currency.

So what then is the problem? Although both the SEC and CFTC have been excluded from any role in the supervision of stablecoin issuers, that role has been largely given to major banking regulators.

That may be understandable, but there are two glaring exemptions. First, a payment stablecoin issuer may opt instead to be subject to a state regulator that has similar rules if this choice is approved by a new and largely undefined body to be known as the "Stablecoin Certification Review Committee."

Most states have little or no experience at regulating stablecoins (or any crypto), and some may want to attract businesses to their state by being lenient regulators. Arguably, the result could be a race to the bottom among the states.

Of course, this argument has long been made (originally, by Justice Brandeis) with respect to incorporation by corporations in the state of their choice. Still, although "charter mongering" has occurred, this danger carries less weight today than in the past (as Delaware has shown itself to require and enforce high standards of corporate governance). But the analogy between corporations being permitted to incorporate in the state of their choice and stablecoin issuers being similarly permitted to choose the state that regulates them is flawed.

If a corporation chooses a jurisdiction with results are results as a surface of the corporation chooses.

tion with weak corporate governance in which to incorporate, it may pay a price in terms of the value at which it can sell its shares. But a payment stablecoin issuer is choosing who will regulate it without this choice being clear to those who rely on the de facto insurance policy that it issues.

Few parties who deal with the Few parties who deal with the companies buying payment stable-coins to hedge will know either who the stablecoin issuer or its regulator is, or their reputations for leniency or negligence. Nor will they likely know how exposed the stablecoin issuer is to volatility.

In any event, the even more important exemption in the Genius Act is for foreign payment stablecoin issuers. Foreign companies can issue and market payment stablecoins in the U.S. only if they are approved (unanimously) by a body that the stablecoin issuers to register with a state (instead of the federal government), at least its total issuance stays below $10 billion.

John C.

The principal function of the SCRC is to ensure that state-level regulations for payment stablecoin issuers align with federal standards. Standing alone, this is already problematic because a state could write adequate guidelines that largely parallel federal ones, but then tolerantly fail to enforce them.

A state might waive some federal rules or, alternatively, just lack the enforcement capability to monitor issuers with any diligence. States may be motivated by the fees paid by a payment stablecoin issuer that registers with them or by the sense that they are aiding an infant industry that will bring other revenues to their jurisdiction.

Alternatively, states may believe that the generally sophisticated issuers that use stablecoins can "fend for themselves." All this sounds vaguely like the complacency that reigned before the U.S. home mortgage market collapsed in 2007-2008.

The SCRC has some other important exemptive powers. Under the

Provable Hires General Counsel With Strong Latin American Legal Perspective

BY MICHAEL A. MORA

Provable, the infrastructure firm supporting the privacy-centric blockchain platform Aleo, announced Tuesday that Damien G. Scott has joined as general counsel, as the company pushes to bring programmable, privacy-preserving technologies into the regulatory mainstream.

And the hire signals Provable's intent to expand its international legal strategy with an emphasis

on Latin America, an early adopter region for digital assets, where Scott brings years of experience handling cross-border transactions and regulatory matters

"Latin America has long been fertile ground for crypto adoption," Scott said, citing Argentina's persistent inflation as a key driver for alternative stores of value. "Seeing how people actually use the technology is helpful."

Scott, who was educated at New York University with a concentration in history and Latin American studies, as well as the Howard University School of Law, focused a considerable amount of his Big Law practice on cross-border deal-making. His Latin American practice culminated in an associate position at Davis Polk & Wardwell in São Paulo, Brazil.

While based in Brazil, Scott observed differences in work culture, noting a regional emphasis on work-life balance. Still, he kept long hours and built relationships with colleagues over post-work soccer matches, for instance, experiences he says shaped his collaborative style today.

And while Scott still frequently visits South America, he decided that after working at three Big Law firms, it was not the path for him and he began to position himself for in-house roles. Scott said he prefers a legal role more embedded in daily business operations.

long as they can," Raymond said.

Sachs added: "What really draws retired GCs back is the opportunity to lead again, often with a wider strategic remit than in years past. Now I can go to the CEO's office and play a much more broad strategic role. That's probably what they're most excited about coming back and doing."

An Easy Decision for CEOs

Recruiters say companies typically only consider hiring a retired GC in limited circumstances. For example, they might need to make a quick hire, or they need to bring stability to a department that's been through a crisis. They also might be keen on hiring an internal candidate as legal chief but believe that person is not quite ready.

A candidate who's retired might be asked to commit to the role for two or three years, not the decade-long commitment companies might seek from a younger candidate. "I've never had a search where a company said to look for somebody who's already retired," Sachs said. "What might come up is a situation where they say, 'We have a strong DGC who could be ready in a few years, so if you find someone with a two-to-fouryear runway, that could work."

In such circumstances, hiring a retired GC can be an ideal choice, said Gilmore, the legal recruiter.

"Having the opportunity to hire a pro who retired on good terms, maybe took a year off to recharge-it's an easy decision for CEOs who don't want to take chances," he said. "It almost guarantees success,'

In addition, Gilmore said, the formerly retired GC's mentorship of the GC-on-waiting can help ensure the candidate is ready when the job opens again.

'My CEO and I put lists together of the most important things to accomplish. You know what was No. 1 on his list? Having fun. I don't think I've ever had that in my past career as one of the things to accomplish in the job,"

"Most of us who have retired and want to come back to work don't need a job," he said. "So what's motivating us? It's fun. If it's not for fun, then why would you do it?

Trudy Knockless can be reached at Liu said that, when he retired from Target, he had no intention of taking another full-time job. He decided he was open to learning about the Flutter role because the company initially cast it as short term, though as discussions unfolded it evolved into a traditional CLO position.

The more Liu learned about Flutter and its industry, the more

"Once I started doing homework on it, it became clear there was such an opportunity to do something that was not only unique for me, but also to engage in an industry in its maturation process," he said.

Attorney Who Led NBA Players Association Joins Litigation Consultancy With Big Sports Ambitions

BY MICHAEL GENNARO

TAMIKA Tremaglio—an attorney who was executive director of the National Basketball Players Association when it negotiated a groundbreaking, seven-year collective bargaining agreement with the league two years ago—has joined the fast-growing litigation consulting firm Secretariat as leader of its global sports consulting practice.

Tremaglio, 55, brings more than three decades of experience in forensic accounting, internal investigations and complex-dispute resolution to Atlanta-based Secretariat. She most recently has been running her own consulting firm, TA Sports Ventures, which she founded after leading the NBPA from January 2021 to December 2023. Earlier, she spent 11 years at Deloitte, where she rose to managing principal for Washington, D.C., its largest U.S. office.

Her work at the NBPA included overseeing negotiations for a new player contract, efforts that culminated in April 2023 with a deal that will pay players $50 billion through the 2029-30 season. The agreement revamped the salary cap, set higher luxury tax thresholds and added new player benefits, with the overarching goals of attracting global talent, fostering financial equity across teams and strengthening the league's global market position.

Tremaglio was the union's highest-paid employee, earning $3.1 million in the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, 2023, according to the NBPA's annual report filed with the U.S. Department of Labor.

Secretariat called Tremaglio "a globally renowned leader" in a press release Monday announcing her hiring.

"Leaders like Tamika don't come around often," Secretariat President Joseph Blanco said in the release. "Her impact on both the international level and in her local communities is profound. Thanks to her unique combination of boardroom fluency, athlete trust, global connectivity, and leadership, she has the rare ability to shape the future of sports business and innovation across multiple sectors and continents.'

Secretariat has grown rapidly and expanded its horizons dramatically since construction industry executive Don Harvey founded it 2008 as a consultancy focused on dispute resolution in that industry. It now bills itself as the top provider of expert witnesses and advisory nies facing the highest-stakes legal, risk and regulatory matters around the world. It employs more than 600 professionals spread across five continents.

Harvey, Secretariat's managing director, said in the press release that Tremaglio will "be instrumental in amplifying our reputation in sports consulting through highly visible engagements across sports communities and ecosystems. With the sports industry undergoing generational transformation and exponential market growth, there has never been more of a need for sophisticated advice and exper-

In an interview with Law.com, Tremaglio said she was drawn to the Secretariat role because of the firm's strong market position and the opportunity to expand its sports practice at a time the field is undergoing transformative change, from the negotiation of rich NIL deals for athletes to the arrival of private equity firms and sovereign wealth funds as major investors.

In the release, she put it this way: "To join a group of such talented people during a momentous time in the industry is thrilling."

In just the last two years, private equity and sovereign wealth fund investments in sports have totaled $50 billion. And ResearchAndMarkets projects the global sports market industry has years of robust growth ahead. It forecasts that the market will swell from $485 billion in 2023 to $651 billion by 2028 and $863 billion by 2033.

Tremaglio, who was the second Black woman to lead the NBPA, received her bachelor's degree from Mount St. Mary's University. She received her law degree from the University of Maryland and has an MBA from the University

In a Deloitte profile of Tremaglio that the firm still features on its website, Tremaglio said she was born two months after her mother graduated from high school-and two months before her mother headed to college, a reflection of her long-held belief that education is the great equalizer.

Tremaglio said in the profile that she was shaped by her transition from public schools to private school at age 14. She said the school did not have uniforms, so it was easy to separate the haves from the have-nots by the clothes they wore.

"I have come to realize over my 25-year career that when you feel like you're not enough and that you don't deserve a seat at the table, you overthink, you overprepare, and you overcompensate," she said in the profile. "You stay up all night to work or study. You overextend yourself to prove you are always on top of it. You do more than necessary, and you continue to do that as if it were in normal course. You know no other way."

Later in the profile, she added: "If someone were to ask me now about the one thing I wish I knew earlier in my career, it would be realizing sooner than I did that I deserve to be here and that. by simply being here as my authentic self, I was, in fact, enough."

In her Law.com interview, Tremaglio said she wants to see more women promoted to high-profile positions and provided the resources they need to succeed.

"It can't be that we're climbing and pushing other people down. It really has to be that we're climbing and pulling," she said.

and the challenges for funding public universities, I think sending all regulation and management of education back to states, as opposed to having the Department of Education doing a lot of the things it has been doing, is going to create a bit of mayhem. I think there's not going to be as much support for schools and students and institutions as there has been," said Hartley.

The department's Office of Civil Rights has always enforced Title IX regulations, but the fact that no announcement has been made about how such regulations will be enforced in the future is concerning, Hartley said.

"We don't know who's going to remain at the Department of Education. And obviously, without Congress formally dismantling the Department of Education, it can't be eliminated altogether, but we don't know what resources it will have remaining and how the secretary will choose to allocate them, but my understanding is that a lot of the standard civil rights cases and complaints haven't been given priority over the last six months since the Trump administration came in," Hartley said.

The widespread job cuts in the Department of Education could mean uncertainty for local school districts that expect to receive a particular source of federal funding, said David B. Rubin of the Busch Law Group in Metuchen, New Jersey. Rubin's firm represents more than 100 districts. He notes he began practicing before the Department of Education was established in 1979.

David B. Rubin of the Busch Law Group in Metuchen, N.J.

The Trump administration has not indicated that it will fail to meet its mandates to provide funding to local schools, said Rubin. But the large scale and rapid pace of job cuts at the Department of Education has left funding streams "in the lurch," Rubin said.

The layoffs "caused a lot of concern and potential chaos in the operation of school districts that rely on a reliable stream of funding, or at least sufficient advance notice that they're not going to get the funding, and both of those assumptions were cast into doubt as a result of what's happening here," Rubin said.

Local schools will also feel the impact of job cuts already underway at the department's Office of Civil Rights, which enforces rules and conducts investigations when violations are suspected. The Office of Civil Rights often gets involved in matters involving children with disabilities.

"In some cases, regional offices have been closed, and we've seen a huge, huge slowdown in enforcement activity in those areas, or even the ability to reach anyone. At the same time, [the Office of Civil Rights] has gotten much more aggressive in going after districts for violating, allegedly violating, students rights, by introducing DEI themes into the curriculum," Rubin said. "So with what little resources they've left with. he Office of Civil Rights have been assigned to the administration's political priorities, as opposed to things they've traditionally been involved with."

Judicial Ethics

Opinions From the Advisory Committee on Judicial Ethics

The Advisory Committee on Judicial Ethics responds to written inquiries from New York state's approximately 3,600 judges and justices, as well as hundreds of judicial hearing officers, support magistrates, court attorneyreferees, and judicial candidates (both judges and non-judges seeking election to judicial office). The committee interprets the Rules Governing Judicial Conduct (22 NYCRR Part 100) and, to the extent applicable, the Code of Judicial Conduct. The committee consists of 28 current and retired judges, and is co-chaired by the Honorable Debra L. Givens, an acting justice of the supreme court in Erie County, and the Honorable Lillian Wan, an associate justice of the appellate division, second department.

Opinion: 25-37

Digest: (1) During the period after a motion is heard and before the judge has issued a decision, the judge need not disclose that court personnel asked him/her for a status update on the motion for administrative purposes; or that the judge was exposed to a brief non-substantive comment about the motion which will not affect the judge's decision.

(2) Where a letter from a party's counsel to the judge about a pending motion is copied to all parties, it is not an ex parte communication. Whether the judge may consider it is a legal question we cannot Rules: Judiciary Law § 212(2)(1); 22 NYCRR 100.2; 100.2(A); 100.3(B) (6); 100.3(B)(6)(a); 100.3(B)(7); 100.3(C)(1); 101.1; Opinions 25-17; 20-195; 16-156; 15-106; 98-144.

Opinion: The inquiring judge heard a motion in a proceeding and is currently working on a draft decision on the motion. In the interim, several individuals have contacted the judge about the status of the proceeding. First, the chief court clerk asked the judge more than once about the case status and advised that the administrative judge "was looking for a status" on the pending motion. Second. a friend of the judge approached the judge unexpectedly, referenced the proceeding, and asked 'Can you just sign the thing?" The friend then walked away.1 Third. an attorney for one of the parties wrote a letter to the judge, copied to all parties, in which the attorney reiterated arguments made at the hearing and recited new unsworn facts relating to certain allegedly deteriorating conditions after the hearing. The letter asserts that the "situation is dire" and urges the judge to issue a decision. The inquiring judge believes he/she can be fair and impartial and is willing to preside, but asks for guidance on his/her ethical responsibilities in light of these unsolicited communications.

A judge must always avoid even the appearance of impropriety (see 22 NYCRR 100.2) and must always act to promote public confidence in the judiciary's integrity and impartiality (see 22 NYCRR 100.2[A]). Therefore, a judge must "not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications, or consider other communications made to the judge outside the presence of the parties or their lawyers concerning a pending or impending proceeding," unless an exception applies (22 NYCRR 100.3[B][6]). For example, "[e]x parte communications that are made for scheduling or administrative purposes and that do not affect a substantial right of any party are authorized, provided the judge reasonably believes that no party will gain a procedural or tactical advantage as a result of the ex parte communication" (22 NYCRR 100.3[B][6][a] [further requiring notice and opportunity to respond "insofar as practical and appropriate"]). A judge's obligation to disclose a particular ex parte communication depends on the communication's 'content, context and circumstances" (Opinions 25-17; 20-195). Certainly, if the ex parte communication includes information about disputed evidentiary facts or other information addressing the merits of a case, a judge must disclose the substance of the communication to all parties (see Opinion 25-17). A judge need not necessarily disclose a non-substantive ex parte communication, however, "especially when the judge concludes he/she can decide the case without considering it" (id.). Thus, for example, we did not require disclosure when an ex parte communication merely commended the judge for his/her prior decision on a case (see Opinion 16-156) or simply expressed a non-party's viewpoint on how the matter should be decided, but contained no relevant facts (see Opinion 98-144). In Opinion 15-106. a judge attended a bar association function while he/she had certain post-trial motions pending before him/her. One of the attorneys sat near the judge and - notwithstanding the judge's efforts to discourage any conversation about the case - decided to "prais[e] the judge's handling of bench conferences" to another attorney in the judge's presence. We concluded the judge "need not disclose a brief and non-substantive conversation with counsel at a bar association function" and may continue to preside

In our view, the messages from the chief court clerk merely inquiring about the status of the pending matter and the court's anticipated decision are not impermissible ex parte communications under Part 100. These intra-court communications are strictly administrative in nature (cf. 22 NYCRR 100.3[B][6] [a]). Since they do not contain any asserted facts and do not appear to be an attempt to improperly influence the judge's judicial decisionmaking process or the outcome of the case, we see no appearance of impropriety.2 Thus, the judge's receipt of these messages does not trigger any disclosure obligations.

The brief, non-substantive ex parte comment by the judge's friend likewise creates no appearance of impropriety. While the comment may reflect a degree of impatience with perceived delay in issuance of the decision, it does not include any substantive facts or arguments. We have advised that a brief, non-substantive conversation in a casual context need not be disclosed (see Opinion 15-106). Here, too, disclosure is not required.

The letter from counsel includes unsworn facts and expresses concern about purported delays in issuance of the decision, culminating in a claim that the "situation is dire." The letter is copied to opposing counsel and hence is not an ex parte communication at all. We can see no ethical

HHS still faces ongoing litigation involving the rule. In Tennessee v. It remains to be seen whether this action will continue in light of the recent Purl

"When you're in-house, you're much more part of the team," Scott said. "You're integrated with business units and the engineers and everybody. You feel like you're one big team all rolling together in the same direction, while in law firms, you're dealing with different clients.'

Scott eventually landed at CoinList as its associate general counsel. He rose to become its general counsel and chief operating officer, where he helped shape the company's regulatory strategy and internal review processes during a period of intense regulatory pressure under the Biden administration. CoinList specializes in digital assets, particularly for early adopters and cryptocurrency enthusiasts.

Scott also led oversight of CoinList's token sale platform, developed policies for listing new digital assets, engaged with key industry stakeholders, including the Blockchain Association, and advised on novel products such as staking services.

Scott now joins Provable under the Trump administration's looser stance on digital assets, opening the company to international growth and innovation. And at the company, Scott will lead the company's legal function, guiding governance, corporate strategy and policy efforts.

"I'm excited about what can be done with this technology now that we have this regulatory movement," Scott said. "There is a real opportunity to advance some real-world use cases, where the technology can be used outside of the theoretical or pure financial or other forms of gambling."

As for whether he is concerned that a future administration could have a different regulatory stance on digital assets, he said that's "certainly a big deal."

"That's why I would like to see some legislation and see something put in place that's not just guidance," Scott said. "But it is hard to know how much this industry might change given the advances in AI, quantum computing and other technologies.'

sense of that statutory phrase in context" and was "persuaded by" the IRS's limitation of "related actions" to "encompass[] a finite group of actions that, while likely unknown to the whistleblower, are objectively connected to the information provided." Lissack, 125 F.4th at 259-60.

An example of a court relying on legislative delegation occurred in Express Scripts, Inc. v. United States, Dkt. No. 162, Case No. 4:21-cv-737 (E.D. Mo. Mar. 18, 2025).

There, a pharmacy benefit management company sought a refund based on Section 199 of the code, which allowed corporations to deduct "Qualifying Receipts derived from 'any lease, rental, license, sale, exchange, or other disposition' of the taxpayer's qualifying production property,' including any computer software.

In claiming an entitlement to the deduction, Express Scripts argued both that its software generated revenue from sales and that the IRS regulations that limited deductions under Section 199 to revenues from sales, as opposed to the provision of services, constituted an impermissible interpretation of the court remarked that Loper Bright "did not affect an agency's ability to exercise rulemaking authority clearly conferred by statute" and that sometimes the legislative delegation of authority is "the best reading of the statute."

In granting the commissioner's motion for summary judgment, the

The court concluded that the distinction in the regulation was a sound interpretation of the statute and that, based on the evidence presented, "Express Scripts did not license or otherwise dispose of its software as set out in 26 U.S.C. §199 and the regulations promulgated thereunder." Express Scripts, Dkt. No. 162 at 42, 46.

Courts Rejecting IRS Regulations Under Loper Bright

Although most tax cases addressing Loper Bright challenges have upheld IRS regulations, several courts have rejected regulations as being at odds with the plain words of the governing statute.

In Memorial Hermann Care Org. v. Commissioner, 120 F.4th 215 (5th Cir. 2024), a nonprofit corporation sought a declaration that it was exempt from federal income taxes under 26 U.S.C. §501(c)(4), which applies to entities "not organized for profit but operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare.'

In rejecting the corporation's application, the IRS and later the Tax Court employed a "substantial nonexempt purpose test" derived from Better Business Bureau of Washington, D.C. v. United States, 326 U.S. 279 (1945), which governs cases under 26 U.S.C. §501(c)(3).

In addressing the plaintiff's argument that the Tax Court should have applied the "primary purpose" test set forth in 26 C.F.R. §1.501(c)(4)-1(a)(2)(i), the Court of Appeals noted that the statutory text was unambiguous, and that "[t]he Better Business Bureau Care Org., 120 F.4th at 219-20. Finally, in FedEx Corp. v. United statutory text." Memorial Hermann

States, No. 2:20-cv-2794 (W.D. Tenn. Feb. 13, 2025), and Varian Medical Systems, Inc. v. Commissioner, 163 T.C. 76 (Aug. 26, 2024), the courts invalidated different aspects of regulations implementing the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act provisions relating to the taxation of dividends that U.S. corporations receive from foreign subsidiaries.

Although most tax cases addressing Loper Bright challenges have upheld IRS regulations, several courts have rejected regulations as being at odds with the plain words of the governing statute.

decision shows that the word exclusively, at least as used in $\S501(c)(3)$, 'plainly means that the presence of a single non-[exempt] purpose, if substantial in nature, will destroy the exemption regardless of the number or importance of truly [exempt] purposes.'

The court then cited Loper Bright for the proposition that 'we no longer are required to provide 'Chevron deference' to the Treasury's interpretation of §501(c)(4) (although we can certainly consider it)" and concluded that "the IRS's embrace of a legal standard cannot supplant our independent interpretation of the

In FedEx, the court originally agreed that the taxpayer was entitled to credits for foreign taxes paid on net profits that remained after losses suffered by some foreign subsidiaries were deducted from the gains generated by others.

In doing so, the court rejected the applicable regulation under Chevron, finding that the plain language of the code permitted the credits at issue.

The government then sought to reduce the credits due to the taxpayer by applying 26 C.F.R. §1.965-5(c)(1)(i), and the taxpayer moved to enforce the court's initial judgment, arguing that the Regulatory Haircut Rule, also contradicts the text of the code.

The government argued that, under Loper Bright, the court was required to respect Congress' delegation of authority to the Secretary of the Treasury, or at the very least to give great weight to the Treasury's subject-matter expertise.

The court rejected these arguments, finding that the Regulatory Haircut Rule contradicted the plain language of the statute, concluding that even under Chevron, an explicit delegation of regulatory authority does not permit an agency to promulgate a regulation that contradicts the governing statute.

Similarly, in Varian, the Tax Court rejected regulations addressing the interplay between two provisions of the TCJA: new Section 245A, which allows a domestic corporation a deduction for certain dividends received from foreign subsidiaries, and amended section 78, which precludes taxpayers that claim foreign tax credits from also deducting the underlying dividends.

Due to a mismatch in the effective dates of the provisions, taxpayers with foreign subsidiaries with taxable years that did not run from January 1 to December 31 had a window where the amendments to Section 78 did not apply to preclude Section 245A deductions.

To address this mismatch, Treasury Regulation §1.78-1 changed the effective date of the amendment to Section 78. Varian challenged the regulation, and the Tax Court determined that the regulation contradicted the plain language of the statute.

In reaching its conclusion, the Tax Court cited Skidmore and emphasized that Congress's delegation of certain rulemaking authority to the Treasury under Section 245A "does the commissioner no good here" since the regulation "falls outside the boundaries of any authority that Congress may have delegated" as it "impermissibly attempts to change an unambiguous provision." Varian, 163 T.C. at 107.

Conclusion

Notwithstanding 26 U.S.C. §7805(a)'s broad delegation of the power to "prescribe all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of" the Internal Revenue Code to the Secretary of the Treasury, cases decided in the year since Loper Bright have demonstrated that courts are prepared to scrutinize regulations issued by the IRS to ensure that they reflect the "single, best meaning" of the statutory provisions.

Thus, while challenging regulations remains an uphill battle, counsel representing taxpayers should not hesitate to press arguments that regulations issued by the IRS are inconsistent with the relevant statutory provisions.

Countries

There is a cap of AU$5,000 (about US$3,250) on cash deposits and withdrawals at crypto ATMs, operators are now required to implement stronger identity verification processes for users, and operators must report to AUSTRAC suspicious transactions or cash transactions exceeding AU$10,000.

Singapore's Monetary Authority (MAS) implemented guidelines in 2022 that effectively shut down all crypto ATMs by banning digital asset companies from advertising in public spaces. While not an outright ban on the machines themselves, the advertising restrictions made their operation commercially

Japan was one of the first major economies to classify cryptocurrencies as legal payment methods, and it has a licensing system for crypto ATM operators regulated by the Financial Services Agency. China has famously opted for an outright ban on cryptocurrency transactions, going far beyond just ATMs.

Legal and Policy Implications

For the blockchain and cryptocurrency industry, New Zealand's ban, along with tightening regulation elsewhere, reinforces several key takeaways:

AML/CFT Compliance is Paramount: The ease with which crypto ATMs can be used for money laundering means that any entity facilitating fiat-to-crypto conversions will face intense regulatory scrutiny. Robust KYC and AML programs are no longer optional but a fundamental requirement for legitimacy and longevity in

The "Wild West" Era is Fading: The notion of largely unregulated crypto activity is rapidly becoming a relic of the past. Governrisk mitigation built in, rather than as an afterthought.

Jurisdictional Arbitrage Becoming Harder: The increasing international coordination and similar regulatory approaches mean that Innovation Must Be Responsible: While the crypto industry champions decentralization and financial freedom, regulators are prioritizing financial stability and preventing criminal exploitation. Future innovations in the crypto space must be designed with compliance and simply moving operations to a less restrictive jurisdiction is a diminishing strategy. Regulators are sharing intelligence and adopting similar best practices, making it harder for illicit actors to find

In addition, though, these regulatory decisions around crypto ATMs raise several important legal and policy questions. First, in terms of proportionality, is a full ban the most effective way to combat financial crime, or could enhanced regulation achieve similar outcomes without stifling innovation?

Second, there is an issue around the impact on financial inclusion. Crypto ATMs often serve unbanked or underbanked populations and removing them could limit access to digital finance for certain users. Third, there remains a global divergence in regulatory approaches, which creates uncertainty for crypto ATM operators and users.

A harmonized international framework could reduce compliance burdens and improve oversight. Fourth, as seen in the UK, enforcement actions can serve as a de facto ban. This raises concerns about legal clarity and the rights of operators. And, finally, there is the issue of technology-neutral regulation.

Should laws target specific technologies like ATMs, or focus on the underlying risks regardless of the

New Zealand's crypto ATM ban underscores the growing tension between innovation and regulation in the digital asset space. While the government's intent to curb financial crime is laudable, the move also highlights the challenges of crafting proportionate, effective, and future-proof regula-

For legal practitioners and compliance professionals, this development serves as a reminder of the importance of staying abreast of global trends. As jurisdictions continue to experiment with different regulatory models, the need for cross-border legal harmonization-and thoughtful, risk-based policymaking—has never been these requirements. Suppose then (in an admittedly extreme hypothetical) that a foreign company that is incorporated in a small Middle East country (say, Qatar) wishes to become an issuer in the U.S. of payment stablecoins.

This foreign issuer wants to tap the very large and growing U.S. market, and the SCRC can enable

But why would the SCRC do so? Remember that Trump has a strong economic interest in stablecoins and already owns a financial stake in World Liberty Financial, which has its own stablecoin (USD1).

Although little is known about who else Trump might strike a stablecoin deal with, reports have surfaced in the financial press that he is negotiating investment agreements with other investment funds as well, including UAE-backed MGX and Binance.

Finally, remember that Qatar recently gave Trump a very thoughtful gift: a new model Air Force One that may have been worth well over $100 million. Of course, one good turn deserves another; reciprocity is normal among friends; and the president naturally wants to return the favor to Qatar.

Given all this, could the members of the SCRC stand up to quiet pressure from Trump if he wanted an exemption for Oatar's hypothetical foreign stablecoin issuer? The members of the SCRC include the Secretary of Treasury, the Chair of the Federal Reserve Board, and the Chair of the FDIC.

Possibly, the Chair of the Federal Reserve Board could refuse the president and effectively veto the approval of the Trump-supported stablecoin issuer, but this could be the deciding factor that caused the president to remove Chairman Powell (who will be out of office in any event in another For the future, we should assume that Trump's Cabinet and lower executive officers know what is expected of them: obey the Boss,

The likelihood then is that, over the longer run, independence cannot be expected of the SCRC if Trump wants a foreign issuer or a non-financial corporation approved as an issuer of payment stablecoin.

coin market is already around $240 billion and seems likely to grow significantly as companies such as Visa and MasterCard enter the market. The key problem with stable-coins is the adequacy of the reserves backing them. Section 4(a)(1) of the Genius Act requires that an issuer "shall maintain identifiable reserves backing the outstanding payment stablecoins...on at least a 1-to-1 basis" (with only high quality, money market type collateral counting).

Appropriate as this standard is, it could quickly trap a stablecoin issuer who is effectively insuring clients who must pay in dollars or euros that become more expensive when their own local currencies would only be required to prepare audited annual financial statements that comply with GAAP if and when their total issuances exceed $50

That's a very high number (particularly when no state may supervise a stablecoin issuer with more than $10 billion outstanding). This bill may be called the Genius Act, but even Moe, Curly and Larry would recognize the very large loophole that arises

In a suit based on common law fraud, the laws of different state jurisdictions may have different elements, and the facts may not be common for all the plaintiffs.

In such an environment, the foreign issuer may be forced either to file for bankruptcy or to begin to defraud regulators. But state and even federal regulators may not necessarily become aware of any reserves shortfall.

Why? Here, the details matter, and the Genius Act takes a curious position on auditing. Stablecoin issuers with less than $50 billion in consolidated total outstanding stablecoin issuance are not required to prepare audited annual financial statements, in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles (unless it is a "reporting company" under the Securities Exchange Act).

Foreign issuers may not be such "reporting companies" and hence here (those under age 30 may be mystified about who these three are, but they can look them up on Google and they are not the draftsmen of the Genius Act, although they may have worked

The Genius Act gives some attention to enforcement, but not much. The Treasury Department, not the Department of Justice, is made the principal overseer of stablecoins, and unfortunately that may imply a slower response time.

Cease and desist orders are authorized, but in a crisis, Treasury may not receive the same speedy response from a U.S. attorney that the DOJ can expect.

Predictably, nothing is said anywhere in the Genius Act about any private cause of action, and thus private plaintiffs may be forced sometimes to sue based on the common law or a contract theory (as Rule 10b-5 will be inapplicable now that stablecoins are not secu-

In a suit based on common law fraud, the laws of different state jurisdictions may have different elements, and the facts may not be common for all the plaintiffs. This could complicate class action certification because class action rules require a predominance of common issues of law or fact over individual issues.

Realistically, a large case may not be resolvable until a bankruptcv court has assumed jurisdiction (and it may take a decade or more before there is any payout).

Even in the Madoff collapse, the DOJ and the SEC were at center stage and could take control. Under the Genius Act, in a similar collapse, we may see multiple states and multiple banking regulators fighting for predominance.

Bottom Line: The approaching issuance of payment stablecoins in the U.S. may induce something of a bubble, and there are usually some predatory actors (and some desperately squeezed stablecoin issuers) accompanying such bubbles.

The Treasury Department will have to learn quickly how to deal with them, as they constitute a very different cast of characters from the traditional bankers with whom Treasury is familiar.

impropriety in the judge considering it to the extent legally permitted. However, we cannot comment on any legal questions (see generally 22 NYCRR 101.1; Judiciary Law § 212[2][1]).

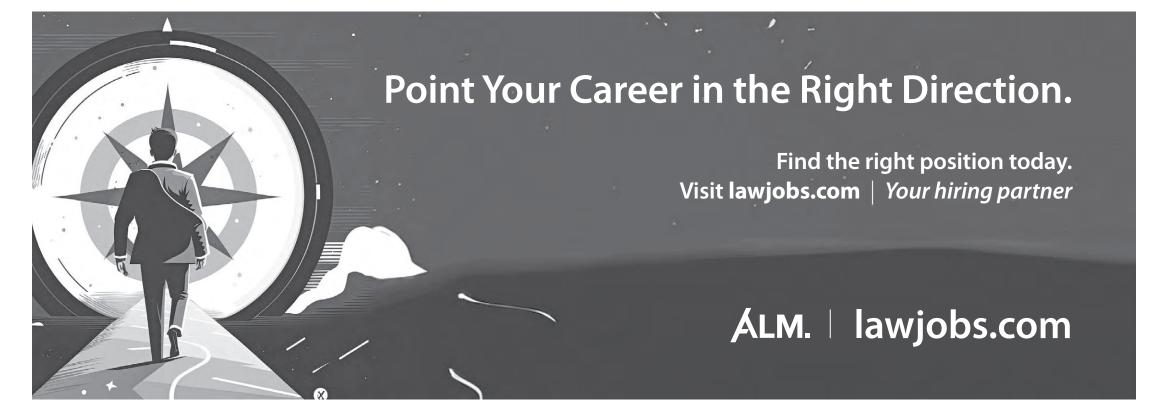

Thus, as the judge is confident he/she can be fair and impartial in resolving the underlying dispute, and has identified no potential conflicts that might require disqualification nor any ethical missteps by counsel that might need to be addressed, we conclude the judge has no further ethical obligations.

1. The judge notes there is nothing to 'sign" in the case, but only a written decision to issue.

2. Indeed, given that a judge must "dispose of all judicial matters promptly, efficiently and fairly" (22 NYCRR 100.3[B][7]) and "should cooperate with other judges and court officials in the administration of court business" (22 NYCRR 100.3[C] [1]), it is to be expected that administrative judges may sometimes inquire about the status of a case without attempting to influence the outcome
