Weil Lures M&A Partner Back From Simpson

Iliana Karaoglan, an M&A lawyer who left Weil, Gotshal & Manges for Simpson Thacher & Bartlett in June 2025, is returning to her former firm of nearly seven years, Weil confirmed on Monday. Karaoglan will rejoin the firm's M&A practice in New York as a partner.

Iliana Karaoglan

For Weil, she is at least the 20th lawyer to leave the firm, only to return, since the beginning of 2023. And that familiarity seems to resonate with Weil's leadership.

Michael Aiello, chair of Weil's corporate department, said the hiring of Karaoglan was part of an "ongoing and continuing" effort to have the right people for the right client needs. "We are always looking at strategic opportunities for growth — both organically and in the lateral market — and bringing someone of Iliana's caliber back to the firm made perfect sense for our practice, for our team and for our clients," Aiello said in an email to Law.com. "Our business is strong — we expect to continue to grow in this way."

When asked about Weil's strategy of boomerang hires — lawyers who leave the firm and then come back — Aiello said the firm's culture was the deciding factor for such hires. That and keeping in touch.

"We stay in touch with people who may leave the firm to pursue other professional opportunities," he said via email. "In many cases, lawyers return to Weil because they know the people, they know the clients, and they know how we work together."

He added that Karaoglan is "an outstanding M&A lawyer with excellent judgment and a practical, commercial approach to advising clients."

"Having previously practiced at Weil, she worked closely with many of the firm's most important clients and developed strong relationships with management teams and in-house counsel that have continued throughout her career," Aiello said.

Karaoglan focuses on public and private mergers, acquisitions and divestitures across industries, including consumer products, media and entertainment, healthcare and real estate, the firm said.

Weil executive partner Barry Wolf said in a statement that the firm has "seen firsthand her ability to deliver top-notch legal work, contribute meaningfully to the firm's culture and earn the trust of clients on their most important matters."

A Simpson representative didn't immediately return a message seeking comment on her move.

Esports Company's Bid to Arbitrate Consumer Class Action Fails as SCOTUS Rejects Cert Petition

The U.S. Supreme Court has declined to consider defendant AviaGames Inc.'s petition to review the denial of its motion to compel arbitration in a federal consumer class action, which accused the mobile gaming company of rigging the outcomes of its online games through the deployment of computer bots.

The Supreme Court denied AviaGames' petition for a writ of certiorari on May 18 after its motion to compel arbitration was rejected in September 2024 by U.S. District Judge Edward Chen in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California.

Burns Charest and Edelson PC filed the initial class action against AviaGames, co-founders Vickie Yuanjuan Chen and Ping Wang and two companies that have invested in AviaGames, ACME and Galaxy Digital Capital Management, on Nov. 17, 2023.

The complaint alleged violations of the California Business & Professions Code, the California Consumer Legal Remedies Act and the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act.

US Government Backs BNP Paribas' Appeal of $21M Human Rights Verdict

The amici brief is one of multiple to be filed at the Second Circuit in support of BNP Paribas.

Second Circuit to vacate a lower court order that paved the way for the landmark decision.

In an amici brief submitted May 29, Clayton argued that a Manhattan federal judge failed to provide "careful and respectful consideration" to the Swiss government's interpretation of its own laws when he "swiftly" dismissed a Swiss official's concerns with his handling of a trial against BNP Paribas.

The trial was conducted under Swiss law and resulted in New York federal jurors holding BNP Paribas liable for Sudan's human rights abuses towards three refugees. But a week before the trial began, the Swiss ambassador to the United States warned the presiding judge, U.S. District Judge Alvin Hellerstein, that he had misinterpreted Swiss tort law.

Hellerstein responded a day later with what Clayton deemed a "cursory and conclusory" decision, allowing the trial to proceed as is. That judgment, Clayton argued to the Second Circuit, should be vacated for Hellerstein to reconsider the matter.

NY County Lawyers Association's New President Focused on Access to Justice

BY BRIAN LEE

THE NEW YORK County Lawyers Association's new president is championing a new task force to explore training paralegals and social workers, to increase the affordability of legal services under attorney supervision.

Ronald Minkoff, who took the reins as the 7,200-member organization's president on Thursday, announced the new study group aimed at authorizing these particular professionals to provide supervised legal services to help bridge the access-to-justice gap.

He named it the Non-Lawyer Practice Task Force.

"We should be a leader on this and not a follower," Minkoff told Law.com on Friday, pointing to similar efforts underway in Washington State.

It is envisioned that the paralegals and social workers would provide services under state authorization and attorney supervision, operating like physician assistants in the medical field.

"It can make it possible for both public interest law firms and private firms to service more people without their attorneys being stretched in too many

'We've Created an Amazing Trans-Atlantic Business': Winston Taylor Goes Live

BY ANDREW MALONEY

THE TRANS-ATLANTIC fusion between Chicago-founded Winston & Strawn and London-based Taylor Wessing is now up and running as Winston Taylor, the combined firm said early Monday morning, with firm leaders touting their services as "actionable advice that is innovative."

Some questions linger over the timing of the integration of all offices and the fact that some Taylor Wessing offices in continental Europe are not part of the combination but still have the Taylor Wessing name. However, leaders of the merged firms say the integration of U.K. and U.S. offices was the heart of the deal closing Monday, noting the combination is already generating trans-Atlantic business opportunities.

Johnson & Johnson Wins Talc Verdict In Oklahoma, Appeal in Pennsylvania

BY AMANDA BRONSTAD

JOHNSON & Johnson won another defense verdict this week in the latest trial alleging its cosmetic talcum powder products caused someone to get mesothelioma. A jury in Oklahoma County District Court handed Johnson & Johnson its verdict on Wednesday after a nearly one-month trial in a case brought by Kathryn Passmore-Meyer, who alleged she was diagnosed with mesothelioma in 2022, at age 59, after using Johnson & Johnson's Shower to Shower. "Yet another jury has rejected the plaintiffs' bar's baseless claims and found that Johnson's baby powder is safe, does not contain asbestos, and does not cause cancer," Johnson & Johnson Worldwide Vice President of Litigation Erik Haas said in an emailed statement to Law.com. "This lawsuit, and the entire talc litigation, has never been about the plaintiffs — it has always been about plaintiff lawyers using junk science to chase jackpot verdicts to line their own pockets at the expense of all and everyone else. We are appreciative that the jury saw through the farce." King & Spalding's Will Stute, in Miami, who was lead defense counsel for Johnson & Johnson, said the jury deliberated for four hours. Members of the defense team who spoke with jurors after the verdict said the decision came down to the science, he told Law.com. "This is an important milestone in terms of a case where the jury could tell the difference between what the associated claims were, generally speaking, whether plaintiffs could prove in this case she was exposed to asbestos through my client's product and whether that gave her mesothelioma," he said. "The jury said, 'no.'" He called the cross-examination of a plaintiffs' expert who acknowledged he didn't find asbestos in one of the bottles Passmore-Meyer used, a "critical moment of the trial." The jury, in its verdict, had the option to apportion fault to the manufacturers of other cosmetic talc products, such as

King & Spalding's Will Stute

SEC Moves to Scrap Biden-Era Climate Disclosure Rule

BY DAN NOVAK

THE U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission on Friday proposed to rescind a Biden-era rule that would have required public companies to disclose information related to greenhouse gas emissions and other climate risks. The rule, issued in March 2024, mandated broad disclosures of climate-related information in SEC filings, including board oversight of climate issues, internal carbon pricing and financial effects from severe weather events. The disclosures never took effect, however. In April 2024, the SEC stayed the climate disclosure rule pending completion of consolidated litigation in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. The court later paused litigation after the commission voted to abandon its defense of the rule in March 2025. Opponents of the rule said the SEC improperly used disclosure to advance an environmental agenda that went beyond the commission's statutory authority to focus on overseeing financial investment. "SEC disclosure obligations should comply with the commission's statutory authority, be guided by materiality as the North Star, avoid the practical effect of dictating corporate behavior, and be imposed only when the expected benefits justify the likely costs and burdens," SEC Chair Paul Atkins said in a statement. Existing disclosure obligations already provide investors information about climate-related matters so further disclosures are unnecessary and should be rescinded entirely, the SEC stated in its proposal. "When climate change or other environmental issues, including transition risk, have materially affected the operations or financial performance of a specific company, existing disclosure rules require discussion of the effects," the commission stated. Benjamin Schiffrin, policy director of the SEC watchdog group Better Markets, defended the controversial rule as appropriate for the agency because it ensures that investors learn about material information on climate-related risks. "These risks are no more material, but also no less material, than other risks that are important to investors," said Schiffrin, a former

SEC Chair Paul Atkins

"Over time, many disclosure requirements began as a framework to illuminate, but instead they've become instruments to obscure," Atkins said during a speech Friday at the Reagan National Economic Forum in Simi Valley, California. Cheers rang out from the crowd when Atkins announced the SEC's latest plan to axe the climate disclosure rule. "It's unusual for a regulator to get applause," he said. "Thank you for that." The public will have 60 days to comment on the proposed rescission from when it is published in the Federal Register.

Matter of Gwyneth Kathleen Murray-Nolan, an attorney and counselor-at-law

Motion Nos. 2025-06562, 2026-00612

Appellate Division, First Department

Renwick, P.J., Kapnick, González, Rosado, O'Neill Levy, JJ.

Decided: May 28, 2026

Jorge Dopico, Chief Attorney, Attorney Grievance Committee, New York (Brian E. Shulman, of counsel), for petitioner.

Ronald A. Berutti, Esq., for respondent.

Per curiam— espondent Gwyneth K. Murray-Nolan was admitted to the practice of law in the State of New York by the Third Judicial Department on October 29, 2010. She maintains a registered address in the First Judicial Department. A New Jersey District XII Ethics Committee (DEC) filed an ethics complaint against respondent charging her with having violated the New Jersey Rules of Professional Conduct (NJRPC) rules 1.7(a) and 1.8 by representing J.O. and H.H., co-owners of a real estate investment limited liability company (the LLC), as their personal counsel in spite of the fact that a clear conflict of interest existed between J.O. and H.H., favoring J.O. over H.H., and submitting documents to the court in H.H.'s name without his review or approval. The relevant facts are as follows. In May 2015, respondent was retained to represent J.O., H.H., and the LLC in connection with the sale of commercial property and ongoing litigation related to the sale of the property brought by a former LLC member. On September 23, 2015, the court issued a consent order in connection with H.H.'s ongoing matrimonial litigation directing him to cooperate with the sale of the LLC property and execute all documents necessary to effectuate the sale, including a limited power of attorney to his wife. In July 2016, respondent and the former LLC member's counsel were negotiating the terms of a consent order to sell the property for $1.1 million. However, H.H. refused to agree to a purchase price of less than $1.6 million. Respondent emailed H.H. stating that she would have to move to be recused as counsel if J.O. did not execute the consent order as there appeared to be a conflict of interest between J.O. and H.H. On August 11, 2016, the court issued an order permitting the sale of the property, which was subsequently sold for $1.1 million on August 18, 2016. However, as H.H. refused to sign the closing papers, his wife, asserting her limited power of attorney, executed the relevant documents to effectuate the sale of the property. Respondent's billing records indicate that on August 19, 2016, she and attorney A.T., who had been retained to represent J.O. and H.H. in the lawsuit brought by the former LLC member, discussed "issues with

Disciplinary Proceeding

[H.H.] and [a] possible conflict with [their] representation." On June 30, 2017, the court issued a final judgment of divorce, which, among other things, directed that the net proceeds from the sale of the property be held in escrow pending the civil litigation with the former LLC member. On November 1, 2016, respondent sent H.H. and J.O. an invoice for her legal services, which H.H. disputed. In July 2017, respondent filed a motion seeking payment of $228,813.29 in legal fees from the net proceeds from the sale of the LLC property that she was holding in her attorney escrow account. The motion included an undated certification from J.O. stating that he was satisfied with her services and requested that she be paid with the escrow funds. Respondent also included an undated certification from H.H., signed by his former spouse on his behalf (pursuant to the limited power of attorney she had been granted as part of her divorce), voicing no objection to the requested payment from the escrow funds. While respondent's fee motion was pending, she filed another motion on July 18, 2017, requesting that J.O. be paid $44,433.61 from the escrowed funds because he had purportedly incurred significant expenses maintaining the property prior to its sale. Along with her motion, respondent included a July 11, 2016 certification purportedly signed by H.H. in litigation with the former LLC member which referred to costs incurred by J.O. prior to the sale of the property. Notably, during the disciplinary hearing, H.H. testified that he: (1) had not approved respondent's fee application or the motion requesting repayment for J.O.; and (2) had not written the July 11, 2016 certification respondent submitted in connection with her motion for repayment to J.O. In response to respondent's two filings, in July 2017, H.H. sent two emails to the court objecting to the motions and stating that a conflict had arisen between him and J.O. Subsequently, on August 1, 2017, H.H. sent respondent a letter terminating her representation of the LLC, and on August 2, 2017, the former LLC member filed a motion to disqualify respondent from representing the LLC and attorney A.T. from representing H.H. and J.O. in their personal capacities due to a conflict of interest. On August 18, 2017, the court conducted a hearing on the motion, after which it issued an order disqualifying respondent from representing the LLC as its corporate counsel and disqualifying A.T. from representing H.H. and J.O. as their personal counsel due to a clear conflict of interest between H.H. and J.O. Further, the court found that respondent and A.T. appeared to have favored J.O. over H.H., potentially violating NJRPC rule 1.7 by abusing H.H.'s former spouse's limited power of attorney to advance J.O.'s position and sideline H.H. and, most significantly, by submitting documents to the court in H.H.'s name, which she knew to contain false statements regarding H.H.'s views of her legal fees, without his review or approval. The hearing panel did not address whether respondent's conduct also violated NJRPC rule 1.8 as alleged in the DEC complaint. The disqualification order was affirmed on appeal. Respondent, represented by counsel, contested the hearing panel's determination before the New Jersey Disciplinary Review Board (DRB). By decision dated January 6, 2025, the DRB affirmed the hearing panel's determination as to the finding that respondent violated NJRPC rule 1.7(a), but dismissed the NJRPC rule 1.8 charge as inapplicable. The DRB further opined that while the formal ethics complaint did not charge respondent with violating any NJRPC rules in connection with her submission of H.H.'s false certification, it considered that conduct in aggravation. The DRB recommended that respondent be censured, and by June 13, 2025 order, the Supreme Court of New Jersey affirmed the DRB's decision and censured respondent. In accordance with the rules for attorney disciplinary matters (22 NYCRR) §1240.13(d), on July 14, 2025, respondent notified the Third Department of her New Jersey discipline, wherein she also asserted defenses to reciprocal discipline. On November 11, 2025, the Third Department transferred the matter to the Attorney Grievance Committee (AGC) for the First Department.

The AGC now seeks an order from this Court, pursuant to the doctrine of reciprocal discipline as set forth in 22 NYCRR 1240.13 and Judiciary Law §90(2), publicly censuring respondent, predicated upon the discipline imposed by the Supreme Court of New Jersey and directing her to demonstrate to this Court why discipline should not be imposed for the underlying misconduct in the form of a censure, or, alternatively, sanctioning respondent as this Court deems just and proper under the circumstances. Respondent, however, in addition to opposing the AGC's reciprocal discipline motion, moves to dismiss, asserting, inter alia, that: (1) the record evidences prosecutorial misconduct on the AGC's part, because it initially stated that respondent failed to report her New Jersey discipline when she had in fact done so to the Third Department; and (2) she received "grossly incompetent legal representation" from her New Jersey counsel, against whom she has brought a legal malpractice action, and this Court should await the outcome of the malpractice proceedings before issuing reciprocal discipline. In opposition to respondent's motion to dismiss, the AGC maintains, inter alia, that its statement that respondent failed to report her New Jersey discipline was neither prosecutorial misconduct nor a deliberate misrepresentation, but rather an error which was corrected. "In a proceeding seeking reciprocal discipline pursuant to 22 NYCRR 1240.13, respondent may raise the following

Expert Analysis

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE

DVSJA Hearings No Longer Waivable in Guilty Pleas

In a significant ruling, the New York Court of Appeals has held that defendants who have been victims of domestic violence cannot waive a Penal Law §60.12 hearing to determine their eligibility for a reduced sentence, as a condition of a negotiated plea agreement.

In People v. N.H., 2026 N.Y. Slip Op 02437, the court, in a 4-3 decision, ruled that defendants who were themselves victims of domestic abuse, should not be made to forfeit the right to seek an alternative sentence under the Domestic Violence Survivors Justice Act (DVSJA), even when they decide to plead guilty.

The court was divided over the legislative intent of the DVSJA, which was effective on Aug. 12, 2019. A plurality of the court (Judges Rivera, Wilson and Troutman) grounded its opinion on legislative intent and public policy considerations. In a concurring opinion, Judge Halligan based her opinion on what she viewed as a statutory mandate. The dissent (Judges Cannataro, Garcia, and Singas) opined that there was no legislative intent to permit a defendant to gain the benefit of DVSJA relief, after entering into a plea agreement not to pursue DVSJA relief.

N.H., a 27 year-old mother, hosted a block party at her family home in Brooklyn. Her abusive ex-partner and father of her child arrived. An altercation erupted during which N.H.'s then boyfriend was injured. N.H fled to her car and, in a panicked attempt to escape her abuser, she inadvertently ran over her sister's girlfriend, dragging her body down the street under the car. The victim was permanently paralyzed.

N.H. was indicted for attempted murder and related charges. Counsel for N.H requested a hearing pursuant to Penal Law §60.12 to determine her eligibility for a reduced

By
Barry Kamins

DVSJA sentence. In support of a sentence of six months' incarceration followed by five years' probation, counsel submitted reports from a licensed psychologist and forensic social worker.

The psychologist concluded that N.H. suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder from years of severe physical and verbal abuse. The social worker recommended that N.H. be sentenced under the DVSJA.

In short, a survivor's right to a hearing, pursuant to Penal Law §60.12, was too valuable to be sacrificed by plea bargaining.

Before any Penal Law §60.12 hearing was held, the prosecution offered, and N.H. accepted, a plea bargain in exchange for her waiver of the hearing, and her right to appeal. Pursuant to the agreement, N.H. pleaded guilty to reckless assault in the first degree (a class B felony) in exchange for a determinate sentence of five years' imprisonment, followed by five years post-release supervision.

Although the trial court questioned whether a defendant may waive a DVSJA hearing as a condition of a negotiated plea agreement, it ultimately concluded that such a hearing was waivable. The court accepted N.H.'s plea and imposed the promised sentence.

The plurality found that "public policy" can be grounded in the Legislature's purpose in enacting a particular statute. As such, the plurality concluded that the legislature's intent was to mitigate the unduly harsh sentencing of domestic violence survivors. In addition, its intent was to correct a structural flaw in the criminal law as applied to this class of defendants.

Despite the legislature's silence on the issue of waivability, the plurality opined that, based on the purpose of the new statute, the legislature did not intend that the right to a possible sentence reduction be waivable. In short, a survivor's right to a hearing, pursuant to Penal Law §60.12, was too valuable to be sacrificed by plea bargaining.

In a concurring opinion, Judge Halligan agreed that a defendant's right to a hearing cannot be waived as part of a plea bargain. She based her conclusion, however, solely on a statutory mandate that evinced the Legislature's intent to make DVSJA relief available in every appropriate case. This mandate flowed from the plain language of the DVSJA, which states that it applies "where a court is imposing sentence upon a person." Penal Law §60.12(1).

In his dissenting opinion, Cannataro opined that nothing in the language or structure of the DVSJA evinces a legislative intent that a DVSJA hearing and determination occur in every case. In addition, he, and his dissenting colleagues, could not find any legislative intent to prohibit a domestic abuse survivor from waiving the opportunity to establish their DVSJA eligibility where a negotiated plea was more advantageous. Finally, there was nothing in the language of the DVSJA itself that prevents a defendant from waiving a hearing pursuant to Penal Law §60.12.

Cannataro also raised what he perceived as a continuing and unfortunate trend in which "this court's waiver jurisprudence has become increasingly arbitrary", at 2. As an example, he cited to People v. Johnson, __ N.Y.3d __, 2025 N.Y. Slip Op 06528 (2025) in which the court recently held that a defendant's facial constitutional challenge to the state's entire firearm licensing scheme was not waivable and, therefore, survived his appeal waiver.

The court's "waiver jurisprudence", as referred to by Cannataro, emanated from People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1 (1989). » Page 7

MEDICAL MALPRACTICE

Liability for Breach of Confidentiality Medical Malpractice

As noted in our earlier discussions, the duty of confidentiality flows from the physician-patient relationship and the attendant privilege, which is codified in CPLR 4504. As recognized in Aufrichtig v. Lowell, 85 N.Y.2d 540 (1995), the physician's duty in this regard derives from the fact that the physician and patient relationship is "akin to a fiduciary bond...."

In Doe v. Guthrie Clinic, Ltd., 22 N.Y.3d 480 (2014), the Court decided a question certified from the Second Circuit: whether, under New York law, liability for a breach of confidentiality based on the unauthorized disclosure of medical information may run directly against a medical corporation when the non-physician employee who breached the duty acted outside the scope of her employment. The Court of Appeals held that it may not.

The plaintiff in that case was being treated for a sexually transmitted disease at the defendant clinic, when a nurse employed at the clinic recognized him as the boyfriend of her sister-in-law. The nurse accessed the plaintiff's records, texted her sister-in-law and informed her of the plaintiff's condition. The sister-in-law then forwarded the texts to the plaintiff, while he was still at the clinic receiving treatment. The nurse was subsequently fired, and the plaintiff sued the clinic, asserting several causes of action, including breach of confidentiality, and negligent hiring and supervision.

The Second Circuit found that the nurse's actions were not foreseeable and were beyond the scope of her employment, noting that the plaintiff specifically alleged she was motivated by purely personal reasons. In finding that the cause of action for breach of confidentiality did not lie against the employer in this circumstance, a majority of the New York Court of Appeals adhered to the principles applicable under respondeat superior.

In accordance with those principles, however, the majority noted that a cause of action could be maintained against the medical corporation for negligent hiring, supervision, or failure to establish adequate policies and procedures to safeguard patients' confidentiality. Judge Rivera dissented, concluding that a direct cause of action against the medical corporation "unhindered by questions as to whether an employee's conduct occurred within the scope of employment, ensures the fullest protections for patients and best addresses the current realities of medical service delivery."

In Chanko v. American Broadcasting Companies Inc., 27 N.Y.3d 46 (2016), the court addressed a breach of confidentiality in a different context. The plaintiffs' decedent was brought to the defendant hospital's emergency room after an accident, where he was treated by the chief resident.

While he was being treated, a television news crew, which had been filming a documentary series in the hospital with the hospital's permission, filmed the decedent's treatment, his death, the declaration of his death, and the family members being told that he had passed. The decedent's widow learned about this sixteen months later when she was watching television and witnessed the airing of the entire ordeal.

The decedent's widow, as executor of his estate, and other family members, brought suit against the hospital and the doctor, among others, alleging causes of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress and breach of confidentiality. The Court of Appeals rejected the former claim, finding that the defendants' actions "were not so extreme and outrageous as to support a cause of action by the patient's family members for intentional infliction of emotional distress." However, it found that a cause of action was stated against the hospital and the doctor for breach of physicianpatient confidentiality, the elements of which it defined as:

- (1) the existence of a physician-patient relationship;
- (2) the physician's acquisition of information relating to the patient's treatment or diagnosis;
- (3) the disclosure of such confidential information to a person not connected with the patient's medical treatment, in a manner that allows the patient to be identified;
- (4) lack of consent for that disclosure;
- and (5) damages.

The court rejected the defendants' assertion that "to support such a cause of action, the disclosed medical information must be embarrassing or something that patients would naturally wish to keep secret," finding that whether the confidentiality is breached "does not depend on the nature of the medical treatment or diagnosis about which information is revealed." It likewise rejected their assertion that the decedent's confidential information was not disclosed because he was not identifiable in the episode that aired on television, citing evidence that at least one person who watched the broadcast other than the plaintiffs recognized decedent, and further observing:

chairman Steve D'Amore and managing partner for Europe and the Middle East Shane Gleghorn said they're capitalizing on London-based clients' interest in U.S. debt markets, as well as opportunities in tech, life sciences, energy and healthcare sectors made possible by the combined footprint and capabilities.

The combination — first announced in December 2025 — creates an organization with more than 1,400 lawyers that's on pace to generate about $1.75 billion in revenue.

In the lead-up to the merger, Winston lost some notable partners, including an IP group to Fenwick & West and a litigation group to Alston & Bird. However, firm leaders said the combined firm will remain in growth mode.

While Big Law firms traditionally cut lawyer ranks in the first few years post-merger, D'Amore said they're "not hoping for that" and didn't want to speculate on whether it was possible. Instead, he said, they're focused on inbound talent and opportunities.

"We will not be settling in," D'Amore added, pointing to the merged firm's increased depth in Europe and underscoring markets like Chicago, Texas, New York and California. "So you're going to continue to see investments from Winston Taylor in those commercial hubs. As much as anyone, I would like to rest. We are not going to rest."

The merger calls for Taylor Wessing's U.K.-led business unit, which includes offices in the U.K., Ireland and Dubai, to be fully integrated into the merged U.K.-U.S. firm.

The firm noted Monday that Taylor Wessing in the Netherlands and Belgium is still anticipated to fully integrate into Winston Taylor. The firm leaders said they don't have a strict timeline for that, but Gleghorn noted they'll be "working on it on a very frequent basis."

Meanwhile, the remains of the international firm in Germany, France and Austria — which split from Taylor Wessing's U.K. practice — will continue to operate within their Swiss Verein under the name Taylor Wessing.

D'Amore and Gleghorn said the split would not create client confusion or undermine the brand of the merged firm.

"No," D'Amore said simply when asked if he thought it would impact the strength of the combination.

"I couldn't be more emphatic than Steve," Gleghorn said, adding that he thinks they've "created an amazing trans-Atlantic business which covers all of the hubs in the Middle East and Europe and the U.S. where we need to be."

Further, D'Amore called the U.S.-U.K. corridor "the heart of this deal. "And obviously, we will have continuing strength in Europe. We'll be in the Middle East, and we're in Latin America as well. But the U.S.-U.K. corridor is really what drives the heart of the transaction."

Winston & Strawn last year increased billing rates by at least 10%, and D'Amore told Law.com that the increase was "consistent with our market and our peers." He echoed that theme on Friday when asked whether the merger could also affect billing rates, saying that the impetus for the deal was competition on a global scale.

"There's nothing wrong with having a regional perspective, that other firms have been focused on," he said. "But for us, and our competitive set, and the clients that have hired us and will hopefully continue to hire us — they have transatlantic, global needs, and we lean into that."

The firm's branding, featured on its new website, was done in partnership with the Wolff Olins consultancy and features custom colors and an original typeface. D'Amore said it is meant to convey a "straight-talking" and "honest, pragmatic" approach, plus "a firm that gives actionable advice that is innovative."

"I think the look and feel of it also is quite important, and it is different from what I think you'll see other law firms doing," he added. "There's a lot of imagery that reflects our commitment to being inside — really being inside — of the work, not ever being above the work."

Supreme Court Strikes Down Freight Broker Preemption Protection

Over the past 24 months, the U.S. Supreme Court has done away with decades of precedent and caused upheaval in social and economic arenas. This new reality of activism and disruption continued on May 14, when the court stated that freight brokers could be held liable in tort under state law for negligent hiring claims when contracting with freight transportation companies. This liability exposure is no longer preempted by the Federal Aviation Administration Authorization Act (FAAAA).

The overarching theme of Justice Amy Coney Barrett's and Justice Brett Kavanaugh's respective opinion of the court and concurrence is that the statute lacks clarity and the court could not read into the statute the interpretation sought by C.H. Robinson and the amicus proponents of preemption.

The decision is vague in and of itself with how the court reached its ultimate conclusion. Justice Barrett relied on generalities such as the Second Restatement's definition of "negligent hiring" and "ordinary definitions" of what constitutes relation to a motor vehicle in determining that the safety exception applies and permits the tort claims against C.H. Robinson to proceed.

The crux of the decision and how the court ultimately reached this conclusion is that Congress explicitly included the "safety exception" for states to exercise a police power over safety regulations in 49 USC §14501(c), which governs interstate commerce, and excluded the same exception in 49 USC §14501(b)'s regulation of intra-state commerce.

The judges would not parse this difference, which meant that their conclusion would rely on whether or not a broker's vetting and hiring of a smaller freight transportation company constituted "safety" issues as contemplated in the statute. The court determined it does.

This is where the court has seemingly taken a significant leap in adopting the petitioner/plaintiff's attenuated logic that if C.H. Robinson had further investigated and evaluated Caribe Transport II, LLC ("Caribe"), then C.H. Robinson would have discovered that Caribe was prone to accidents and therefore C.H. Robinson can be liable for contracting with Caribe. This leap by the court is exploring and far-reaching, as we will explore more in Justice Kavanaugh's concurrence.

Justice Barrett and the court, without terribly deep analysis, merely connect the dots between a vehicle being "used on a highway in transportation" and that, because C.H. Robinson is hiring a company engaging in that activity, allegations as to C.H. Robinson can be required to "exercise ordinary care" in selection of these carriers. Therefore, because the petitioner/plaintiff "alleges that C.H. Robinson failed to exercise reasonable care when it hired Caribe Transport, which had a subpar safety rating from federal regulators, to transport goods via truck," C.H. Robinson can be found liable.

During oral arguments, Kavanaugh delved into most of the practical and real-world implications of what the court's consideration of this issue would mean.

He then focused in his concurrence on issues such as why congress would enact insurance requirements on carriers and not brokers if Congress wanted brokers to be exposed to similar liability.

that came in over and above the baseline revenue that we brought in from our regular work."

Some of these cases date back decades: This year, Mitchell Silberberg received a payout from its representation of the people onboard TWA Flight 847 when it was hijacked by Iranian Hezbollah militants while en route to Athens in June 1985, and their heirs. The $353 million judgment against Iran was obtained and the firm received a payout last year from the United States Victims of State-Sponsored Terrorism Fund, which Hazzard said "was set up a number of years ago and is financed via sanctions that the U.S. gets from companies that do business with countries that are on the U.S. terrorist watch list," he said. To date, that fund has paid out over $10 billion to victims, per the U.S. Department of Justice.

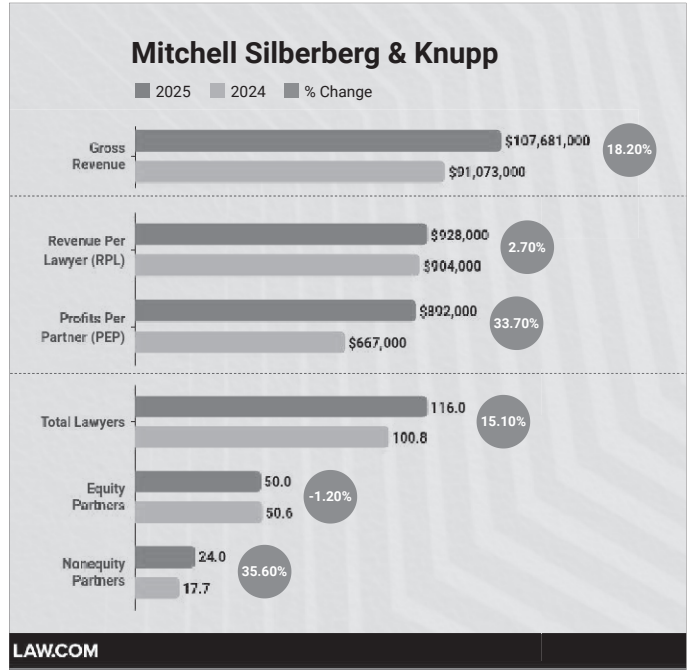

Another case that paid dividends years after a ruling was

EVA MARIE UZCATEGUI/BLOOMBERG

Managing partner Yakub Hazzard noted that contingency work is increasingly prevalent.

Litigation work on a contingency basis "was an outlier at the time that we took those cases on, but it's becoming more and more commonplace today," Hazzard said. He said the firm hired a pricing analyst to help evaluate its billing rates and "also to help us think about alternative fee arrangements differently and where we could be strategic and benefit from them." Clients are also looking for more AFA options, Hazzard said.

related to North Korea's attack on the U.S.S. Pueblo Navy spy warship in 1968. Mitchell Silberberg represented the crew and their descendant families in litigation that eventually resulted in a $2.3 billion judgment against the Republic of North Korea in February 2021.

"What we do is we take those judgments and we register them with this fund, and as the fund collects and distributes money it pays out, the folks who have judgments on a pro rata basis, and they don't pay out necessarily every year, but it turned out that 2025 there was a significant payout of some funds," Hazzard explained. "This year, 2026, is even a more significant payout."

"But even without that additional contingency money, we still would have exceeded our baseline budget by a substantial amount and would still be knocking right on the door of having had a record year, even without that contingency revenue," Hazzard noted.

With offices in Los Angeles, New York and Washington, D.C., Mitchell Silberberg employs 113 total lawyers, about 4% less than the year prior. Hazzard was keen to point out the firm's revenue and PEP rose despite having fewer overall fee earners than the past year. Total partner head count at the firm was up roughly 8.3% to 74 people in 2025.

HBO is another client of Mitchell Silberberg's: The firm backed it in a lawsuit brought by Janet Van Ham, a photographer on Bill Maher's talk show, who alleged in 2023 that she was victimized by a hostile work environment and subjected to sexual harassment and retaliation while on set. The suit was voluntarily dismissed in April 2025.

Last year, Mitchell Silberberg also began representing HBO owner Warner Bros. Discovery in a case brought by HomeVestors of America, a production company that alleged Warner Bros.' HGTV show "Ugliest House in America" infringed on its existing trademarks, and that case has not yet been ruled on.

Game developer Activision Blizzard, Disney subsidiary Marvel Entertainment and other studios, including Apple Studios, CBS, Fox Corp., Netflix, Sony Pictures Television and Universal Television, are also clients on the Mitchell Silberberg roster.

"The record success is really a direct reflection of the impact of our execution of our strategic plan that we adopted a couple of years ago," Hazzard said of the firm's recent work. "It's also buoyed by the continued excellent performance of our labor and employment and litigation practices, but also our transactional trust and estates and immigration practices."

the developer of online games such as Bingo Clash and Solitaire that stages multiplayer tournaments on its platform. According to the plaintiffs, instead of matching human competitors of comparable skill levels against each other as advertised, AviaGames manipulates gameplay by pitting players against bots, resulting in fewer cash prizes for AviaGames users.

Matt Tripolitsiotis, plaintiffs counsel in the New York office of Burns Charest, said in an interview that the class action was brought on behalf of "millions" of class members.

"And since bringing the case, we've been contacted by many of our class members, and they confirmed to us some really horrible stories of losing six figures or more," he said. "There's some really bad stories about people who thought, 'If I just get better, I'll make up my losses.' They didn't realize they were at a casino and not at a skills competition."

Chen ruled in his September 2024 order that "the agreement to arbitrate is unconscionable and thus not enforceable." The judge's decision was affirmed by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in August 2025.

"I think one of the important holdings of the district court was that it was not going to sever these unconscionable provisions and enforce an agreement that was clearly designed to oppress the consumers," Tripolitsiotis said.

He added that the Supreme Court's rejection of certiorari was notable given industry pushback and an amicus brief in support of AviaGames filed by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in the Ninth Circuit in January 2025, which argued that Chen's ruling "threatens the availability of [arbitration] benefits because it deprives businesses of the ability to protect themselves as well as their customers and workers from abusive mass arbitrations and blackmail settlements."

In April, another online gaming developer, Skillz Platform

Inc., achieved a $420 million win against rival Papaya Gaming Ltd. in a case leveling similar allegations of false advertising, gamefixing and bot fraud. A jury in the Southern District of New York found that Papaya had violated the Lanham Act by deploying bots as "players" in "skills-based" mobile gaming tournaments, issuing a total verdict award described by plaintiffs counsel at King & Spalding as "the largest Lanham Act award ever."

Skillz had previously prevailed against AviaGames in a patent infringement lawsuit that alleged AviaGames used bots to fix its online tournaments in February 2024, securing a verdict award of $42.9 million, and has sued Voodoo SAS, the producer of the mobile game "Blitz Win Cash," over similar allegations of mobile gaming fraud.

Tripolitsiotis added that the case will proceed to the discovery phase after it is remanded to federal court and that he is hopeful that the trial will be scheduled within the next year or year and a half.

"We want to see these people brought to justice. It's amazing, the amount of losses and the sad stories that we've encountered—people ... who've been duped and don't know where to turn," he said.

AviaGames and its counsel at Kecker, Van Nest & Peters did not respond to requests for comment.

Cravath Adds DOJ National Security Attorney

Cravath, Swaine & Moore, as its first lateral partner hire this year, has added Michael Patrick Daly, a 12-year veteran of the Justice Department's National Security Division. Daly will work out of the firm's corporate practice in its Washington, D.C., office.

Cravath said he will advise U.S. and international clients on the regulatory aspects of cross-border transactions and matters involving the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States (CFIUS), leveraging his experience.

"Mike brings deep experience in national security and foreign investment matters central to the regulatory process our clients consider when pursuing cross-border investments," Faiza Saeed, Cravath's presiding partner, said in a statement.

Daly, who was an associate at

Michael Patrick Daly for national security during his tenure. From 2019 to 2024, he served as an attorney adviser within the Foreign Investment Review Section of the National Security Division. Before joining the section, Daly worked for six years in the Special Operations Unit of the Division's Office of Intelligence, Cravath said.

While Daly is Cravath's first lateral partner hire of this year, and the firm has seen some partner exits in 2026, Cravath hired several lateral partners last year, including from Linklaters and Paul Weiss. The firm in November also promoted six attorneys to its partnership ranks, effective in January.

Daly was not available to comment for this story, but he said in a statement that he looks "forward to working alongside them (Cravath) in guiding clients through their most consequential cross-border investments."

Cravath has established a strong beachhead in D.C. behind the hires of several former high-ranking government officials. Those include Jennifer S. Leete, former associate director of enforcement at the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission; Noah Joshua Phillips, former Commissioner of the U.S. Federal Trade Commission; and Jeffrey Rosen, former acting U.S. attorney general and deputy attorney general, among others.

EMPLOYMENT LAW

Why U.S. Companies Cannot Ignore Forced Labor in Supply Chains

U.S. law has long prohibited the “importation of goods mined, produced or manufactured in whole or in part with forced labor.” Initiation of Section 301 Investigations of Acts, Policies, and Practices of Various Economies Related to the Failure to Impose and Effectively Enforce a Prohibition on the Importation of Goods Produced with Forced Labor, 91 Fed. Reg. 12,884 (March 17, 2026). Yet, the practice of receiving work or services from people under the “menace of any penalty for its nonperformance and for which the worker does not offer himself voluntarily” persists.

The International Labour Organization estimates that more than 27 million individuals work under conditions of forced labor worldwide. These individuals work in industries that feed, clothe, and power the consumer economy in the United States. For U.S. companies operating in high-risk sectors, addressing forced labor risk is both a matter of corporate social responsibility and a compliance obligation.

U.S. government interest in forced labor enforcement is intensifying on multiple fronts. For example, the Uyghur Forced Labor Prevention Act creates a presumption that goods originating from the Xinjiang region of China are made with forced labor, and companies can face detention of shipments, civil fines, and sanctions if they cannot rebut that presumption.

The law thus places the burden squarely on the U.S. importer to demonstrate that forced labor is not found in their supply chains. Most recently, the Trump administration launched forced labor investigations into dozens of countries as part of its expanded enforcement posture, signaling that exposure is no longer confined to any single geographic region or industry.

Against that backdrop, plaintiffs’ lawyers have increasingly used the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act (TVPRA), codified at 18 U.S.C. §1595, to bring civil claims against persons or entities for their participation in, or benefit from, forced labor and human trafficking that occurs anywhere in their supply chains.

Although certain industries such as textiles, critical minerals, and agriculture are particularly at risk, companies across industries can face meaningful exposure under the statute. U.S. courts have found that the TVPRA does not confine liability to those who directly participate in a violation but extends it to any commercial actor that benefited from a venture the actor “knew or should have known” was violating the law.

Because plaintiffs frequently bring TVPRA claims against multiple defendants and often pursue their claims as class actions, a single lawsuit can expose a company to significant damage claims, attendant litigation costs, and reputational harm. Thus, companies should establish appropriate mechanisms to identify, address, and confirm the absence of forced labor in their supply chains.

Background: 18 U.S.C. §1595

The TVPRA extends civil liability beyond those who directly commit the offenses. Specifically, liability reaches any person or entity that (1) knowingly benefits, financially or otherwise, (2) from participation in a venture (3) that the person knew or should have known was engaged in forced labor, human trafficking, or other conduct prohibited by the statute. 18 U.S.C. §1595.

Knowledge

Courts have drawn a firm line between general awareness that a sector or region has a forced-labor problem and actual or constructive knowledge that a particular supplier or a particular facility has engaged in specific violations. The former, standing alone, does not suffice to establish knowledge of the prohibited activity. How specific that knowledge must be, however, is a question courts have answered differently.

Some courts have required that defendants be shown to have constructive knowledge tied to the specific individual bringing the claim. Doe v. Red Roof Inns, Inc., 21 F.4th 714, 725 (11th Cir. 2021). Other courts have found that constructive knowledge of the venture’s general pattern of violations is sufficient. G.G. v. Salesforce.com, Inc., 76 F.4th 544, 558 (7th Cir. 2023).

Participation in a Venture

Whether a company has “participated in a venture” turns on the nature and depth of its relationship with the offending entity, not just whether a commercial

What Exactly Is An AI-Native Law Firm?

BY BENJAMIN JOYNER

THE PAST two years have seen a flurry of new firms marketing themselves as “AI-native,” AI-powered” or “AI-enabled.” But despite the growing number of firms adopting such descriptors, it can be difficult to pin down what exactly it means for a law firm to be AI-native.

At the moment, the answer might depend on who you ask.

“I don’t think we have an ascribed meaning to what it means to be an AI-native, AI-first law firm,” said Logan Brown, founder of AI-powered law firm Soxtan. “A good point for people that [want] to use one of these law firms is to ask what that means. I think that it can mean a lot of things to different people.”

Firms that describe themselves with phrases like AI-native can vary in important ways. Some, for instance, operate as hybrid firms affiliated with legal tech companies, while others are standalone entities. These firms can also differ in how autonomous their AI sysems are and whether or not they use off-the-shelf software for legal work.

While there may not be a complete industry consensus about how AI-native and similar terms should be used, the leaders of individual firms have more concrete definitions of what sets them apart.

For New York-based Soxtan, being AI-powered means structuring internal workflows from scratch around the use of AI to the greatest extent possible while preserving human oversight.

“By AI-powered, I mean that we’re an AI-first law firm, and so from first principles we’re ... thinking through, whatever the task, whatever the issue is, how we can use AI to get to 98% of the way, and then make sure that humans’ time is used efficiently,” Brown said. “There are lawyers that review anything that is client-facing, we never have AI just doing something and going directly to the client.”

That AI-first approach is also a part of how AI-native firm General Legal defines its work. “What it means is we use AI maximally, mainly behind the scenes,” said Javed Qadrud-Din, co-founder and chief technology officer of the San Francisco-based firm. “Our AI takes the first cut at anything that comes in to us, and then our lawyers review that output and remove some of the output, add to it, modify it and then give it back. ... We use AI in a more complex way than most law firms do.” A key part of these firms’ strategies is identifying work that AI models are well-equipped to handle and designing software to carry out these tasks. Both Soxtan and General Legal rely on

Fried Frank Rolls Out Proprietary AI Platform for Asset Management Tasks

BY BENJAMIN JOYNER

FRIED Frank announced Thursday the launch of FundAssist, a proprietary artificial intelligence platform designed for use by the firm’s asset management, regulatory and tax lawyers. The new platform is intended to support document search and drafting capabilities in private fund formation, fund operations and related tasks.

Fried Frank Partner Becky Zelenka

FundAssist is designed to allow users to build client-specific precedent libraries, allowing them to ask questions across a corpus of fund documents and receive relevant responses with clients’ preferred language. The platform integrates with Fried Frank’s document management system and includes an agentic drafting tool designed to generate long-form fund documents, which is currently in beta testing. The firm ultimately intends to allow clients to directly access the platform themselves.

Partner Becky Zelenka, who co-heads the firm’s private equity funds group, told Law.com that FundAssist was tailored to the distinct needs of private funds practice, which relies on unique and complicated data sets. Clients in the space also have distinctive preferences around preferred language, which can be hard to maintain in some of the general-purpose tools the firm uses.

“When a lot of the commercial tools go in, they’re finding everything on the system,” she said. “FundAssist actually lets us mark [that] we gave this provision here, but we don’t want to give it again. ... [That] this is where this client wants to be, not necessarily where they might have ended up.”

Fried Frank global head of innovation and knowledge Conan Hines added that FundAssist was built on years of knowledge management work, which allowed the firm to design the platform with a relatively small internal group.

“The big lift here is the knowledge architecture that’s 10-plus years in the making, because the AI tools are so good, if you have really well-structured data, it can do wonders,” he said. “We do have AI engineers, we’re investing more in

‘Shadow’ AI Risk of Personal Data Exposure Haunts C-Suites, Boards

BY CHRIS O’MALLEY

A RECENT data breach at a Pennsylvania bank may be the most horrifying example to date of the risk artificial intelligence poses when employees use unauthorized versions of the technology for work.

The practice, known as shadow AI, is putting pressure on legal departments, boards and management to take stock of what AI platforms are being used at work—and to ensure employees are trained to use only AI tools the corporations approved.

IBM, in its Cost of a Data Breach Report 2025, found that 20% of the 600 organizations it surveyed suffered a breach due to security incidents involving shadow AI. That’s 7% higher than breaches involving sanctioned AI.

Average breach costs were $4.74 million for companies with a high level of shadow AI—$670,000 more than for firms without or with very little shadow AI, the report stated.

In fact, the “swift rise” of shadow AI displaced security skills shortages as one of the three most costly breach factors in IBM’s report.

Yet “we have some people that are like, ‘Oh. No, we’re buttoned up. Like everything is good. But I just want you to double check,’” said JetStream Security general counsel Patrick Zeller, whose company developed an AI governance platform that can sniff out shadow AI.

Afterwards “they’re rather stunned by the sprawl of unknown AI, shadow AI that people [employees] are using,” Zeller added.

CB Financial Services, based in the southwestern Pennsylvania village of Carmichaels, was more than stunned on May 5, when it learned an employee used an unauthorized AI app to process customer information.

“Among the customer information the Bank has determined was disclosed are customer names, social security numbers and dates of birth,” the $1.6 billion asset parent of Community Bank stated in a filing with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission on May 11.

CB said it is strengthening its existing controls and enhancing monitoring. Though it is still investigating, the incident is not expected to have a material impact on financial conditions, the bank said.

It remains to be seen whether the event will trigger litigation.

But the shadow AI incident implicates more than just a small bank in the hinterlands between Pittsburgh and the West Virginia state line.

Zeller—who has worked in privacy and security issues at Fortune 100 companies, the U.S. Justice Department and the Illinois attorney general’s office—said shadow AI breaches may stem in part from boards and CEOs implementing AI at breakneck speed in recent years.

Even this year, AI investment is likely to hit $650 billion, according to a Goldman Sachs projection.

before a mass layoff or plant closing.

But that is not the only class action concerning the airline to surface this week.

On May 19, Wites & Rogers
in Lighthouse Point submitted a class action complaint on behalf of now former employees of aircraft ground handling company
AGI, who performed ground work

Marc
Wites,
Wites &
Rogers

for Spirit Airlines and were allegedly fired by AGI without the required WARN Act notice and related benefits after Spirit folded. The case was filed in the U.S.
District Court for the Southern District of Florida in Miami.

Eric Lechtzin of Edelson Lechtzin LLP in Newtown, Pennsylvania, lead attorney for the proposed airline employee class in the Dionne suit, said the case was filed in the bankruptcy court in
New York because that is where Spirit's Chapter 11 proceeding is pending.

Stuart
Davidson,
Robbins
Geller

"There's no way that litigation
can proceed in any court other
than in the bankruptcy court,
unless Spirit consented to it,
which I think you recognize how unlikely that is," Lechtzin told Law.com.

The complaint was initially filed
on behalf of six former employees,
and Lechtzin said it has since been amended to add state WARN Act claims under New York and New Jersey law, along with four additional plaintiffs from those states.
The named plaintiffs are seeking to represent the broader group
of roughly 17,000 former Spirit
employees who were allegedly terminated when the company
ceased operations.

"The way a class action works
is you have a small number of people representing a large group
that have the same claims," Lechtzin said. "The whole idea of a class action is that it would be impractical to bring 17,000 people into court. Our firm works exclusively in the class action world. When we file a case as a class action, we expect that the case will be resolved on a class
basis."

The case creates a new front
in Spirit's bankruptcy, shifting attention from creditors, aircraft
leases and the airline's remaining assets to the employees who say they were left without jobs,

benefits and sufficient warning.
The practical question is not just whether the former workers can prove a WARN Act violation, but where their claims would stand in the line of creditors seeking payment from the bankruptcy estate.

In *Rony Almeida v. AGI Ground,
Inc.*, lead counsel Marc Wites
says he and his co-counsel, Stuart Davidson of Robbins Geller,
are geared up for their client's
recovery.

"AGI, like Spirit and the rest of the world, knew that Spirit
would go out of business in the immediate future, and was obligated to give proper notice to its employees under the WARN Act," Wites continued. "AGI will surely argue that Spirit's collapse was unforeseen, but we believe
the jury will find that a very hard pill to swallow."

The WARN Act Examined

Aaron Solomon, a New York
management-side employment
attorney who is not involved in the case but regularly handles
WARN Act issues, said WARN
Act cases can be comparatively straightforward to certify as class actions because the central question often applies across the entire workforce.

"When you're looking at class actions, you're looking at if there's a common, unlawful policy; if the claims are typical across the employees, they have the same claims and the employer has similar defenses," Solomon said.
"WARN, I've always viewed it as a very easy class claim."

Solomon said that if an employer failed to provide proper notice
to one affected employee, the same alleged failure often applies to others in the same layoff.

"You didn't give the notice to one person. They're entitled to up to 60 days of back pay, and therefore you didn't give it to everybody else," Solomon said. "If you're adjudicating one person's claims, you can adjudicate everybody at the same time. That's a class action."

For that reason, Solomon said
he believes the plaintiffs have a strong chance of obtaining class certification. But certification is only part of the battle. Because Spirit is in bankruptcy, he said,
the employees could face a harder fight when it comes to actual
recovery.

"I think they could have a problem recovering," Solomon said. "What they're doing, in my opinion, is they're trying to get a claim in. So that way, they can at least try."

Solomon said he would not expect full recovery, given the competing obligations in the bankruptcy case.

"You've got to keep in mind,
they've got leases on aircraft.
They've got gas bills to pay," Solomon said. "They might have secured debt that's ahead of them.
I'm not a bankruptcy attorney, but I think it's kind of hard to imagine that they're going to have full recovery on this."

The likely defense, Solomon said, could involve exceptions to WARN Act liability, including the argument that Spirit faced unfor-seeable business circumstances
and gave as much notice as practicable. Under federal law, employers may in some circumstances
provide less than 60 days' notice,

Eric
Lechtzin,
Edelson
Lechtzin

but they still must give notice as soon as practicable.

Solomon said that defense may depend heavily on what Spirit
knew and when it knew it.

"If they're telling people everything is fine, but at the same time
they're preparing a bankruptcy
petition, that, to me, is a big clue
as early as practicable," Solomon said. "Even if they couldn't have done it fully 60 days before, perhaps they could have done it 50

Aaron
Solomon,
Kaufman
Dolowich

days or 40 days before."

He said a company in that position can issue a WARN notice
and later revise it if the situation
changes.

"You could always retract a WARN notice. You can always extend the layoff date by serving another notice," Solomon said.
"But get it out."

Solomon said Spirit may argue that rising fuel costs or sudden financial pressures left it without enough time to provide notice, but he questioned whether those circumstances developed overnight.

"I think it's certainly an argument they can use," Solomon said. "But then again, when that started happening, was that 30 days from the layoff? Possibly.
Was that 40 days from the layoff?
Did they have enough information
or foresight to say, 'We've got a problem and we could be shutting this company down in the near future?'"

Lechtzin said he does not doubt there are enough assets
to fund a recovery before a jury.
"This company has literally billions worth of aircraft and aircraft
parts, as well as other assets," Lechtzin said. "What they owe to their employees is only a fraction of that."

The bigger issue, he said, is
"how their claims are prioritized versus other creditors in Spirit."

Times That Try Lawyers' Souls:
A Lawyer's Duty in a Constitutional Crisis

BY DANIEL KORNSTEIN

I t is a good thing for all Americans, especially lawyers, to celebrate the 250th anniversary
of our Declaration of Independence. A commitment to freedom should be constantly re-affirmed.
The noble sentiments of the Declaration, hailed around the globe,
still inspire, even if they sometimes fall short of the lived reality. But it is important to remember the glowing ideals that gave birth to our country.

However wonderful, the Declaration of Independence is not the only writing from 1776 worth Americans' attention this anniversary year. Seventeen-seventy-six was a banner year for publications highly relevant to Americans in 2026. In addition to our Declaration, three others come
readily to mind.

First, Adam Smith's
"Wealth of Nations," the bible of classical economics, was published in 1776. In his influential book, Smith launched his "invisible hand" theory to supposedly show how the profit motive benefits everyone
in society as well as society as a whole. His theory helped bless the unbridled capitalism and the laissez-faire free market that powered fantastic American economic growth in the nineteenth century.
To this day, we Americans continue to vigorously debate the pros and cons of Smith's theory, and how much to regulate the economy.

Second, even more timely for today's Americans, 1776 saw the publication of the first volume of Edward Gibbon's majestic "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire." Given recent controversial comments
about the possibility of the United States being a "nation in decline," Gibbon's book, chock full with tyrants and a once-famous Senate that gave away its power, ought to be a cautionary tale that is "must reading" for Americans, if only to learn how to avoid Rome's fate.

And, third, perhaps the timeliest
and most urgent 1776 publications
for us today are Thomas Paine's rousing and amazingly popular pamphlets "Common Sense" and
"The Crisis." In them, Paine
explained independence to Americans and described why revolution
was necessary and right.

Even if you have never read anything else by Paine, you know
the famous immortal opening lines
of the first (Dec. 19, 1776) issue of "The Crisis":

These are the times that try
men's souls: The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service
of his country, but he that stands
it now, deserves the love and thanks
of man and woman.

A few days later, George Washington had those stirring words,
which embody the Spirit of '76, to his freezing and dispirited troops
before crossing the Delaware.

We also find in "The Crisis" the statement that, unlike in tyrannies
where "the King is law... In America
THE LAW IS KING." In later issues, Paine wrote: "Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom must,
like men, undergo the fatigues of supporting it"; "Men who are sincere in defending their freedom
will always feel concern at every circumstance which seems to make against them"; and "A genuine public spirit always appears most when there is most occasion for it." And in "Common Sense," Paine exhorted:
"Ye that dare oppose, not only the tyranny, but the tyrant, stand forth!" How apt are Paine's comments today?

Paine, like Jefferson, speaks to us clearly and eloquently across two-and-a-half centuries. Of all the great writings of 1776, Paine's pamphlets are the best to celebrate this year along with the Declaration of Independence. When the Revolutionary War ended, Paine wrote in the last issue of "The Crisis" that

""The times that tried men's souls'
are over." He was wrong, they are not over. They are back. For many of us, right now—2026—is almost unbearable. Every day we learn of the latest outrage and, like Tom Paine, say, or at least think to ourselves, again and again, and with increasing frustration, "These are the times that try men's souls."

What should we lawyers do when the Constitution is being mangled by people
in power, by government officials in high places? What is our responsibility and obligation?

But where is our Tom Paine? And what would he say to us lawyers
today? Lots.

On the 250th anniversary of our Declaration of Independence, America is in crisis. In many ways
it is a crisis that, ironically, calls
to mind those heady days of 1776.

Stacy Schiff, biographer of revolutionaries Ben Franklin and Sam Adams, recently wrote an essay in the New York Times persuasively demonstrating how many of the Founders' complaints in the Declaration against King George exist
today against our own national government. It is unnecessary to recite the list; we all know it, and it is growing. Each day we see more depressing proof of it. Amid this grim context, the Times has been compiling an alarming "autocracy
index" to track various categories
of democratic erosion in the United States.

We first learned about the Declaration and admired the Constitution, and our system of government, its separation of powers, and the Bill of Rights, as children in grade school, where we pledged allegiance at the start of each school day. We learned more about the Constitution and its traditions in college and especially in law school. Did you ever imagine in your Constitutional Law course that you would one day see what is happening today?

Now, in our maturity, we are witnessing a wholesale violation of that fundamental charter, the legal system, and even of the idea of representative democracy. By any measure it is a crisis that jeopardizes our precious heritage from 1776. As Abraham Lincoln warned at Gettysburg, we are again today
finding out whether our nation
"conceived in liberty and dedicated to [the Declaration's] proposition that all men are created equal...can long endure" and whether government by the people "shall perish
from the Earth."

Lincoln foresaw this domestic
"approach of danger." In his 1838
Lyceum Speech, he pointed out that our "political institutions" will not be destroyed "from abroad,"
but their destruction "must spring up amongst us." Lincoln said, "We must ourselves be its author." We must avoid this outcome, he added, lest we "die by suicide." He warned against home-grown men
of "ambition" who would attack
our freedoms and framework of government.

What is an American citizen,
especially a lawyer, supposed to do in this new, worsening crisis?
What should he or she do when the Constitution is being mangled
by people in power, by government officials in high places? What is our responsibility and obligation?
Each of us took the lawyer's oath

of office to "support the Constitution of the United States." This "pledge," explained the Second Department in 2006, is of "such gravity and importance" that "its obligation endures for the life of the attorney's career at the bar." It "requires the individual to uphold
and maintain the authority of the Constitution."

Those of us who were in the armed forces also took a slightly different oath. "I do solemnly swear," we said, "that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic,
and bear true faith and allegiance
to it." Presidents say something similar when they are inaugurated.

What do these patriotic oaths mean today? Are they just idle words spoken
as window dressing
on special occasions? Or do they count for something? If they mean anything, they mean lawyers have a special responsibility, by virtue of their expertise and profession,

to protect the Constitution. How can we be true to these pledges
when faced with the disturbing current events? How do we defend the Constitution when elected officials, even the president, and their appointees become domestic enemies of the Constitution? This is not the time for lawyers to be "sunshine patriots." The pressing questions of the day for lawyers are: What can we do? What should we do?

Here are some suggestions:

Litigate. We can do what we know how to do best: we can file lawsuits. We can and should call out in the courts illegal government action. We might not win every case, but we will win enough, and the mere act of challenging wrongful government acts in court keeps
the pressure on rather than passively letting it happen without protest. We are not an inert profession.
Of all groups in society, lawyers are
most well equipped by education,
skill, training, and temperament
to fight in court encroachments on liberty and the rule of law. Think of the Declaration and the Constitution as our clients and represent them zealously and energetically.

Seek Sanctions. When government lawyers misbehave when conducting litigation, when they ignore their obligations as officers of the court, when they lie or mislead the court, when they flagrantly violate
court orders, then seek sanctions.
Government lawyers should be subject to the same court rules
as private lawyers.

File Ethics Complaints. All
lawyers, including lawyers for the federal government, are subject to ethical standards of conduct in the jurisdictions in which they were admitted. If they violate those rules, they can be disciplined—
including suspension or disbarment—for such professional misconduct. Some such complaints have already been filed and are gaining traction.

Lobby. Not all the action occurs in courtrooms. Legislatures make the laws. So try to be involved in legislative change. Lawyers know how laws are passed. Use your influence.

Speak Out. Let our voices be heard. Find opportunities to talk to groups or individuals in person or on-line about what is happening and how you feel about it. Use social media, write blogs, articles,
op-ed pieces, even books criticizing what is happening. Protest takes many forms.

Teach. Look for ways, formal or informal, to teach people about the current situation.

that, but it actually doesn't take a huge team ... if you have a well-manicured data infrastructure

The platform leverages publicly available frontier models, including OpenAI's GPT-5.4 (with GPT-5.5 expected to follow soon after testing), as well as smaller models that can perform some tasks more efficiently.

Zelenka said that not all of Fried Frank's private funds clients have been added to the platform yet, as the firm serves a wide and diverse swath of the market with varying comfort levels around the use of AI.

"Some clients are all in, and they don't understand why the AI can't do it all from start to finish already," she said. "A lot of clients are also more restrained."

Hines added that the timing of the eventual rollout of direct client access will depend on a number of factors, as the firm wants to allow its own attorneys to assess the effectiveness of the tool and assure its accuracy before handing it off.

"AI can hallucinate. We've spent a lot of effort in basically bringing that down to zero, ... but we want to have a significant sample size to have that sort of confidence," he said, adding that the firm also wanted to develop a structured onboarding process.

Zelenka told Law.com that the firm does not intend to directly monetize FundAssist, instead making it available to attorneys carrying out traditionally billed work.

"Our focus is on developing the technology and making it useful, and just another tool that's available to our lawyers," she said. "It's just part of the practice now of being a funds lawyer in this space, and it's a really cool time to do it."

The development of FundAssist comes after Fried Frank adopted Intelligent Legal Solutions' ProVision platform to deliver side letter services to fund formation clients, launched a strategic partnership with Centari and adopted additional legal tech tools such as Legora and Draftwise.

The firm is one of a number of large law firms that have decided to develop their own AI offerings in recent years. IP firm Sterne Kessler similarly built a practice area-specific product in patent drafting tool Patent Assist AI, firms including White & Case and Troutman Pepper Locke have developed proprietary chatbot-style tools, Davis Wright Tremaine introduced AI-powered legal writing training software, and Linklaters created a new practice to build matter and client-specific AI tools.

Freshfields is working with Anthropic to build legal AI workflows, and the Financial Times has reported that Kirkland & Ellis plans to spend $500 million developing a proprietary AI platform.

Plea

In Seaberg, the court, for the first time, held that there was no public policy precluding defendants from waiving their rights to appeal as a condition of a plea and sentence bargaining agreement.

Having said that, however, the court did not exclude the possi-

Prior to Seaberg, the court had also held that a defendant who pleads guilty does not forfeit a number of other rights, e.g., the right to challenge the constitutionality of the statute under which he was convicted; the right to challenge a court's jurisdiction when an accusatory instrument is based on evidence which the prosecutor knows to be false; and the right to challenge a waiver of indictment.

plea bargaining. These are "claims that are preserved by legislative design or judicial recognition," People v. Manragh, 32 N.Y.3d 1101, at 1106 (2018) and relate either to jurisdictional matters or to rights of a constitutional dimension. The third, and most exclusive group, is comprised of rights that survive a guilty plea but which may not be waived by plea bargaining.

After Seaberg, the court has found non-waivable appellate claims on exceedingly rare occasions. In People v. Rudolph, 21 N.Y.3d 497 (2013) the court held that the legislature intended that there be a youthful offender determination in every case where the defendant is eligible, even when the defendant agrees to forgo it as part of a plea bargain. The court concluded that the right to be assessed for youthful offender treatment is "too valuable... to be sacrificed in plea bargaining." More recently, as mentioned above, the court found that a facial challenge to the state's firearm licensing statute is not waivable.

In People v. N.H., the court has now expanded the extremely limited group of issues that survive a guilty plea, and which cannot be waived by virtue of a plea agreement. In doing so, the court has determined that judges, not prosecutors, retain the ability to decide who is eligible for a reduced sentence under the DVSJA.

As examples, the court cited appellate claims which it had previously found not to be waivable: the constitutionality protected right to a speedy trial; the legality of court-imposed sentences; and a defendant's competency to stand trial.

bility that, in certain instances, a defendant's appellate claim could be reviewed despite a bargained for waiver of the right to appeal. It acknowledged that certain waivers are unenforceable when they "transcend the individual concerns of the defendant" and "embrace the reality of fairness in the process itself."

As examples, the court cited appellate claims which it had previously found not to be waivable: the constitutionality protected right to a speedy trial; the legality of court-imposed sentences; and a defendant's competency to stand trial.

After Seaberg, the court further clarified the three classes of rights that are affected by a guilty plea. In the first group, there are rights that are forfeited by operation of law as a consequence of a guilty plea. Flaws of an evidentiary or technical nature are normally forfeited by a guilty plea, e.g. the statutory right to a speedy trial; transactional immunity; or a prosecutor's failure to notify the grand jury of defense counsel's request to call a particular witness. People v. Hansen, 95 N.Y.3d 227 (2000).

The second group of rights are those that survive a guilty plea, but which may be waived by virtue of

Talc Verdict

Gold Bond and CoverGirl.

Benjamin Braly, of Dallas-based Dean Omar Branham Shirley, represented Passmore-Meyer and her husband, John Meyer. His firm has won several large verdicts against Johnson & Johnson, including a $1.5 billion jury award last year in Baltimore City Circuit Court.

"Every jury's view is differently," Braly told Law.com. "We more than satisfactorily met our burden of proving she was exposed to asbestos from Johnson & Johnson's Shower to Shower products. The simplest way I can put it is they disagreed with us."

In a transcript of his closing argument, Stute told jurors that Passmore-Meyer had a family history of cancer and was exposed at a young age to an asbestos plant in the New Orleans area.

"You just heard Mr. Braly ask us—ask you to award 22 and a half million dollars," he told the jury, according to the Wednesday transcript. "Wasn't this supposed be about the truth?"

"We weren't there to prove the claim that those things caused or contributed to her mesothelioma," Stute told Law.com. "This felt much more like an attempt to pin this on Johnson & Johnson without specific science to do that rather than an investigation of find out the truth."

Braly said the defense arguments were "speculative."

"There is a part in Southwest New Orleans, not even on the other side of Mississippi River, that has a well-known history of asbestos contamination," Braly said. "She didn't live there. She only lived in Louisiana at all for the first 16 months of her life."

Passmore-Meyer, now 63, lives in Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Braly said his firm has two other mesothelioma trials against Johnson & Johnson pending in Los Angeles Superior Court.

The verdict comes one day before the Pennsylvania Superior Court, a state appeals court, affirmed a 2021 defense verdict for Johnson & Johnson in an ovarian cancer trial.

"As recited in the court's well-reasoned decision, plaintiffs failed to 'provide any basis for reversal' of the jury's determination that Johnson's baby powder is safe, does not contain asbestos, and does not cause cancer," Haas said in an emailed statement to Law.com. "As we have said from the beginning, this lawsuit and the entire talc litigation has never been about serving the plaintiffs, nor about finding the truth—it has always been about plaintiff lawyers using junk science to chase jackpot verdicts to line their own pockets."

That case, brought by Ellen Kleiner, was the first, and one of the few defense victories, in a string of talc trials in Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas. Blank Rome's Jim Smith, in Philadelphia, was lead counsel for Johnson & Johnson.

Leigh O'Dell, of Beasley Allen in Montgomery, Alabama, who represented Kleiner, did not respond to a request for an interview. The appeal focused largely on experts and evidence that plaintiff's attorneys argued should have been allowed into trial.

Johnson & Johnson has an ongoing trial in Los Angeles Superior Court involving the families of three women who died of ovarian cancer after using its talc products. The trial is the second bellwether case as part of ovarian cancer lawsuits against Johnson & Johnson coordinated in California's Judicial Council Coordinated Proceedings. On Dec. 12, another Los Angeles Superior Court jury awarded $40 million in the first ovarian cancer bellwether trial against Johnson & Johnson.

DECISIONS WANTED!

The editors of the New York Law Journal are eager to publish court rulings of interest to the bench and bar. Submissions must include a sentence or two on why the decision would be of significance to our readers. Also include contact information for each party's attorneys. E-mail decisions to decisions@alm.com.

to Patrick Henry, we all should answer: "Forbid it. We know not what coarse others may take, but as for us, give us liberty to practice law with professional independence or give us professional death." It is hard to imagine Patrick Henry or fiery lawyer John Adams, were they alive today, yielding to such pressure. Are we made of lesser stuff?

So, yes, in the run-up to this year's special Fourth of July, let's give three loud, enthusiastic cheers for our magnificent Declaration of Independence, our national birthright of freedom, but also let's think hard about what it has meant for 250 years and what it means today for us lawyers in America's current crisis. Let the Spirit of '76 imbue our Spirit of '26, so that one day soon we will be able to say that the times that tried lawyers' souls are over.

different directions," Minkoff said. The task force will initially focus on potentially addressing housing and debtor-creditor matters, with potential expansion into family courts, he said.

However, Minkoff estimates implementation will take years due to the lengthy process of drafting reports and gaining approval from the state judiciary and other entities.

He also noted potential resistance from the state Board of Bar Examiners, which jettisoned a similar proposal years ago.

Minkoff noted the existence of a free navigator program through which non-attorneys help unrepresented court users in distinct courts in New York City. But he suggested the program falls short because providers cannot give legal advice or stand with litigants before judges.

Beyond access-to-justice reform, Minkoff's one-year term as president includes priorities to attract younger lawyers to the organization. He plans to prioritize training on networking, resume writing, and building a client base.

Minkoff succeeds Richard Swanson, and the new president noted that the NYCLA was the first and most prolific bar association to stand up to the current federal administration.

Minkoff said the NYCLA addressed executive orders targeting law firms, "the lawless rendition of illegal and legal migrants to hellhole detention centers and foreign countries."

He said it also criticized "the Supreme Court's misuse of the shadow docket."

Minkoff told Law.com that the NYCLA, New York City Bar Association and the New York Council of Criminal Defense Lawyers are collaborating on a rally, titled "Lawyer Up."

Attorneys will speak about ongoing rule-of-law concerns during the event scheduled for June 16 in Foley Square in lower Manhattan.

"The idea is that the legal profession has to step up and be the bulwark against whatever the administration is doing, and protect people on their voting rights, immigration rights, civil rights, and the rights of federal workers to not get laid off just because some crazy person with a buzzsaw decides to lay them off," he asserted.

Otherwise, the new president said he will also focus on ensuring association committees are working and that comments on proposed ethics rule changes are implemented, along with ensuring the judiciary is supported against attacks from various sources.

Minkoff is a partner at Frankfurt Kurnit Klein & Selz PC, head of what he said is the largest of its kind Professional Responsible Group. It represents lawyers in matters ranging from admissions, discipline, reinstatement, partnership disputes and malpractice.

He is a past president of the Association of Professional Responsibility Lawyers, a national organization of about 500 lawyers, and past chair of the city bar's ethics committee.

Minkoff began his legal career in the 1980s at the Legal Aid Society of Nassau County.

the Swiss government, and relied almost entirely on its own previous opinions about the content of Swiss law that were written without the benefit of the Swiss government's views," Clayton wrote. "It thus ran afoul of principles of international comity and respect for the sovereignty of foreign states."

The amici brief is one of multiple to be filed at the Second Circuit in support of BNP Paribas. Represented by Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen & Hamilton, the bank seeks to overturn a landmark human rights verdict holding it liable—through its banking activities—for Sudan's human rights abuses in the early 2000s.

The country had then been led by President Omar al-Bashir, who prosecuted a war in the Darfur region that the U.S. government has recognized as a genocide, and had been heavily sanctioned by the international community. In 2015, the U.S. Department of Justice levied a $9 billion penalty against BNP

Paribas for violating U.S. sanctions. But in a separate amici brief that was also filed on May 29, the Swiss government argued that BNP Paribas hadn't violated Switzerland's own sanctions on Sudan. BNP Paribas' banking activities in Sudan were lawful under Swiss banking law, Switzerland argued.

"Although the district court professed to apply Swiss tort law, in reality it created a new type of secondary liability that no Swiss court would ever recognize," Switzerland said.

The Swiss government's support was expected, considering its intervention in the district court. But the U.S. government had stayed quiet during those lower court proceedings, according to Lee Boyd, a partner at Hecht Partners and one of the attorneys representing more than 23,000 Sudanese refugees suing BNP Paribas.

In a written statement to Law.com, Boyd called the amici brief "a stunning reversal."

"The government stayed silent for over a decade—through investigation, prosecution, civil trial, verdict. Then, within 25 days of the Trump Administration's former Solicitor General and close ally of the President, Jeffrey Wall, joining BNP Paribas's legal team at Gibson Dunn, DOJ seemed to suddenly find a reason to weigh in—the on-the-foreign bank's side," she wrote.

In his amici brief, Clayton explained that the U.S. government was now participating based on its own interest in ensuring that a foreign sovereign's interpretation of its own laws is afforded proper respect.

"The failure of American courts to afford that same consideration and weight to a foreign state's views on its own laws invites a reciprocal disregard of U.S. views in foreign cases, contrary to the interests of the United States," according to the brief.

Influential trade groups, including the Bank Policy Institute and the American Bankers Association, and former judges of the Federal Supreme Court of Switzerland and the European Court of Human Rights, also filed amici briefs in support of BNP Paribas.

the statutory interpretations of the Solicitor General, is unfortunately keeping in current practice with the recent disruption created by the Supreme Court in overturning Chevron and other highly impactful shifts away from precedent.

The next shift is what commercial transportation companies do next. The industry and we as a defense bar cannot escape reality—this will increase liability, exposure, and the sheer number of lawsuits that will need defense. But Justice Kavanaugh did appear to leave the door slightly cracked open for a little ray of hope to shine through when he adopted the petitioner/plaintiff's words that brokers "just have to hire carriers that actually have a reasonable policy." This itself will create disruption.

But large commercial transportation companies do have extensive handbooks, rulebooks, and operational guidelines. The reality is that many 'mom and pop' operations do not, but the industry may need to work with and assist these companies in that endeavor while at the same time maintaining necessary separation.

The industry can lead these smaller partners to water but cannot be directly involved in rule-making and policy-making, or that will open the door to a different liability theory entirely.

This area of the law has changed for the time being. There is a faint hope that Congress will close this loophole, but that remains to be seen. Thankfully, there are actions the industry can take in the meantime, and the legislative process could limit the impact of this decision in the future.

While companies clamored for AI to drive productivity and efficiencies, some failed to put AI through typical cybersecurity or legal reviews, Zeller said.

"Now the Niagara Falls of AI is all around us and people are scrambling trying to figure out what to do," Zeller adding, recalling a recent presentation JetStream made at a meeting of the National Association of Corporate Directors.

"We got a lot of follow-up questions like, 'You know, we're not being briefed on this. What questions do we ask and how do we get into these risks from a compliance aspect from board leadership?'" Zeller recalled.

One of the principal risks associated with shadow AI is data leakage, Alex Mathew, a computer science professor at Bethany College in Bethany, West Virginia, wrote in report for the Information Systems Audit and Control Association.

"Shadow AI operates in silos," he added. "As such, employees may misuse AI tools and systems by sharing confidential and proprietary business information with external parties or giving access to strangers to cause breaches and losses of intellectual property."

The scope of those potential losses is staggering, Zeller warned.

"It's not just personal information that can be impacted. It's your trade secrets—think of the Coca-Cola formula," for example, Zeller said.

"It's sensitive financial data, insider information that has to go to your investors," he added. "It's IP. It's your pricing models, your supply chains. And it's also attorney-client privilege communications. It's this whole spectrum of risks."

Combating shadow AI risks starts with taking inventory of AI tools being used in an organization, Zeller said, adding that employees should be limited to authorized tools.

Organizations must also burnish their AI usage policies and thoroughly train employees, who may be tempted to use unauthorized tools when in a pinch.

That temptation can be strong, particularly in the fast-paced world of health care. A Wolters

Kluwer survey of 518 health care professionals found that 17% admitted to using an unauthorized AI tool. Another 40% said they encountered such tools at work "but did not use it."

"Organizations must educate employees on ethical standards and regulatory requirements regarding AI," Mathew stated. "This training should include compliance measures and discussions on the risk created through unauthorized AI use."

Zeller said policies are often ineffective if employees misunderstand what they can and cannot use. And while some organizations may be tempted to step back from AI to reduce risk, it may be more risky to not provide AI authorized tools.

"If you try to stop all access to AI, they'll go home and do it," Zeller said.

"They'll do it from their personal phone—whatever they can do to make things easier," he added. "So it's this balance of getting your employees access, with proper guardrails."

Vote. Presidents, governors, senators and congresspeople, state and local legislators matter. Legislative majorities matter; they pass laws and can be a counterweight to the executive. Take part in every election, no matter how local or seemingly inconsequential. Get others to vote too. Voting is the lifeblood of democracy.

Campaign. Do what you can to get your candidates of choice elected. Maybe even become a candidate for office yourself.

Demonstrate. Participate in marches. Protest (non-violently). Show you are not passive. Do not give up our rights quietly.

Never Give In. Winston Churchill said, "Never give in except to convictions of honor and good taste, never yield to the apparently overwhelming might of the enemy." Not everyone in our current crisis followed that sage advice. Over the past eighteen months, we have seen some great law firms in this city, firms with enviable histories and fabled reputations, cravenly knuckle under to government threats because they feared losing clients or earning less money. At the same time, a few brave law firms have stood up and refused to be so cowed, and, so far, have won in court.

To paraphrase what lawyer Patrick Henry said in his famous 1775 "Give me liberty or give me death" speech: "Is a second home in the Hamptons so dear, or avoiding conflict with the federal government so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of our self-respect and professional slavery?" And to finish the nod

dent, thereby rendering plaintiffs unable to state a cause of action based solely on the broadcast of the program, the complaint expressly alleges an improper disclosure of medical information to the ABC employees who filmed and edited the recording, in addition to the broadcast itself.

The court also rejected the defendants’ argument that the plaintiffs had not alleged any specific damages, noting that discovery may reveal the decedent was aware of the presence of non-medical personnel while he was being treated and any reaction to that presence, and further commenting that “damages may be awarded for injury even if it only lasted for a short period of time before death.”

Subsequent to our prior column on this subject but before Doe and Chanko were decided, there were several Appellate Division decisions addressing this cause of action. In Randi A.J. v. Long Island Surgi-Ctr., 46 A.D.3d 74 (2nd Dept. 2007), the 20 year-old plaintiff who had an abortion at the defendant’s facility, sued for breach of confidentiality after a nurse disclosed information over the phone to her mother, which revealed both the pregnancy and the procedure.

Citing multiple facts and circumstances at the facility that led to the disclosure, including the absence of any written plan to protect patients’ right to privacy, a divided Second Department found that punitive damages were warranted for the breach.

In Burton v. Matteliano, 81 A.D.3d 1272 (4th Dept. 2011), the plaintiff sued his doctor for sending medical records, without his consent, to a physician his employer retained to determine whether he was fit to return to work after an accident. The physician determined that he was not, which led to the plaintiff losing his job. The Fourth Department found that the Supreme Court erred in dismissing the cause of action against his doctor for breach of confidentiality.

The case of Juric v. Bergstraesser resulted in three decisions from the Third Department on issues related to breach of confidentiality. As gleaned from those decisions, the action stemmed from the plaintiff’s claim that the defendant—the former family physician for plaintiff and his wife—became involved via telephone in a visit he made to an emergency room, after which the defendant told his wife of the details of the visit and that she and her child might be in danger.

This resulted in the denial of plaintiff’s visitation with his daughter. The defendant asserted a justification defense based upon purported evidence that he was experiencing major psychiatric pathology, had a stack of gun magazines, had been verbally abusive to his wife and left the hospital against medical advice.

In the first decision, 44 A.D.3d 1186 (4th Dept. 2007), the court reinstated the cause of action for breach of confidentiality, finding that justification or excuse is an affirmative defense that depends upon a showing of circumstances. In the second decision, 105 A.D.3d 1301 (4th Dept. 2013), the court ordered a new trial after a defense verdict, holding that the evidence was legally insufficient to support the justification defense and was against the weight of the evidence, noting “that defendant was, at best, equivocal regarding how serious and immediate a threat plaintiff presented.”

In the third decision, 133 A.D.3d 951 (4th Dept. 2015), the court affirmed a judgment for the defendant based upon the jury’s finding that the defendant’s breach of confidentiality was not a substantial actor in causing the plaintiff injury.

Turning to decisions applying the Court of Appeals’ holding in Doe, the First Department held in Eng v. NYU Hosps. Ctr., 172 A.D.3d 645 (1st Dept. 2019), that dismissal on summary judgment was warranted as to a claim against a hospital for failing to secure the plaintiff’s decedent’s medical records but not as to a claim for negligent hiring and supervision.

The decedent went to the hospital after falling, and a psychiatric evaluation led to a 15 day involuntary commitment. One of the decedent’s daughters, who was a nurse at the hospital, gained access to the decedent’s medical records without authorization and used them to support her application to obtain guardianship over the decedent. After she left the hospital, the decedent named another of her daughters, the plaintiff, as her health care proxy, who confirmed that she was not suffering from a psychiatric condition.

Since the nurse-daughter’s motives were personal, the hospital was not liable for her breach, but there were issues of fact as to whether the hospital knew or should have known she would use her credentials to gain access to her mother’s records.

The court noted that the plaintiff had expressed concern to the doctor about performing an examination for the district even though he was her physician, and that this might present a conflict of interest.

The Third Department addressed similar circumstances in Webb v. United Health Servs., Inc., 221 A.D.3d 1315 (3rd Dept. 2023). The plaintiff had been treated for pain with opioids by the defendant doctor for years when someone placed an anonymous call telling the doctor that the plaintiff was selling the drugs. The doctor sent the plaintiff for a screening test that came back negative, after which she decided to wean the plaintiff off the drugs.

During this time, a medical assistant employed by the same health services organization as the doctor, but at a different facility, accessed plaintiff’s medical records on multiple occasions without reason. The plaintiff sued the doctor, the health services organization and the hospital that employed the doctor, asserting that they negligently failed to safeguard her records and negligently allowed an unauthorized employee to alter them.

The plaintiff testified that the anonymous call was made by her boyfriend’s daughter, out of spite, and that the medical assistant who improperly accessed her records was related to the boyfriend’s daughter. Under these circumstances, the court found that the medical assistant’s actions were outside the scope of her employment, such that the defendants were not liable for her transgression.

It further found that they could not be held directly liable for negligent hiring, supervision or inadequate policies because the medical assistant’s conduct was not foreseeable, and there was no evidence that they were aware of her relationship to the plaintiff or that her actions could have been prevented by additional training or supervision.

More recently, in Hurley v. Rochester Reg’l Health ACO, Inc., 236 A.D.3d 1455 (4th Dept. 2025), the Fourth Department found that the plaintiffs’ complaint stated a cause of action against a hospital, a medical practice and a health services organization for negligently breaching their duty to safeguard or monitor access to patient records, which were allegedly improperly accessed by a nurse employed by the hospital.

Other recent decisions have assessed claims of breach of confidentiality in relation to the five elements identified in Chanko. The plaintiff in Razzano v. Goldman, 178 A.D.3d 866 (2nd Dept. 2019), who was employed by a school district and claimed to have developed respiratory problems at work, was examined by her primary care physician at the request of the district to determine if she could perform her duties. The physician wrote a report to the district concerning his findings, and annexed various medical records. The plaintiff sued the doctor and his group, alleging a breach of confidentiality.

In affirming the denial of summary judgment, the Second Department found that the defendants had not established the absence of a physician-patient relationship with respect to the subject examination (the first element specified in Chanko), or that the plaintiff had waived the privilege (which relates to the fourth element—lack of consent).

The court noted that the plaintiff had expressed concern to the doctor about performing an examination for the district even though he was her physician, and that this might present a conflict of interest. It further noted that the doctor testified that he and the plaintiff had come to an understanding that it was in her best interest to fix the problem, and that he considered himself an advocate for the plaintiff and for the district.

In Bonner v. Lynott, 203 A.D.3d 1526 (3rd Dept. 2022), the Third Department analyzed the evidence in relation to the elements of the breach of confidentiality cause of action in finding that summary judgment dismissing that claim was unwarranted.

The plaintiff, who had been appointed to a one-year term residency program at a veterinary medicine college, was placed on probation due to concerns with her performance, and subsequently took a leave of absence at the recommendation of her treating psychiatrist. After she returned to the program, one of her professors expressed concerns over her behavior to a psychologist at the college, who in turn contacted her psychiatrist.

The psychiatrist indicated that he was aware of a deterioration in her condition and that she was “a mess.” She was subsequently denied reappointment to the program for a second year. In reinstating the plaintiff’s claim for breach of confidentiality by the treating psychiatrist, the court observed that only two of the five elements of the cause of action were disputed by the defendant—whether the information disclosed was confidential and damages.

As to confidentiality, the court found that while persons at the college knew the plaintiff was being treated by a psychiatrist, they were unaware of his opinion that her condition was deteriorating. As to damages, the court found that the plaintiff could recover for the emotional distress she suffered from the disclosure of her confidential medical information, as well as economic and non-economic damages from not getting reappointed. The court also found issues of fact as to whether the breach was a factor in her not getting reappointed.

Finally, in a circumstance that does not precisely involve breach of confidential information, the Third Department found in Perry v. Rockmore, 238 A.D.3d 67 (3rd Dept. 2025), that the plaintiff’s complaint stated a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty against a plastic surgeon and other entities based upon their posting before and after photos of the plaintiff on commercial websites and social media platforms to promote the plastic surgeon’s work.

The plaintiff alleged that the defendants had a physician-patient relationship with her, and that they breached their duty that flowed from that relationship by disclosing photographs, which had been taken in the course of treatment without her agreement. The court found that this alleged breach was not “premised upon the invasion of a nonexistent common-law right to privacy,” but rather on the “well-established duty a physician owes to his or her patient....”

Thus, since we last addressed the subject, the courts have provided further definition to, and limitations on, the cause of action for breach of physician-patient confidentiality. Such claims should generally be analyzed in relation to the elements set forth in Chanko.

However, liability will generally be limited to the offending individual, unless the breach either was done within the scope of that person’s employment, or resulted from direct negligence by the employer or facility in failing to properly supervise, promulgate and enforce policies, or otherwise take reasonable and necessary steps to protect the patient’s confidential information.

Labor

relationship existed. For courts to find that an entity is a venture, the offending entity does not need to be a trafficking or forced labor enterprise; a legitimate business whose operations have engaged in conduct that violates the statute can qualify as a venture.

However, not every commercial relationship rises to the level of participation. For example, a company that purchases goods through a supply chain without exercising meaningful operational involvement in or control over its suppliers’ conduct has not crossed the “participation in a venture” threshold.

The decision in Doe v. Apple Inc., 96 F.4th 403 (D.C. Cir. 2024) illustrates how courts have drawn the line between participation and non-participation in an offending enterprise. In that case, plaintiffs claimed that major technology companies such as Apple, Alphabet, Dell Technologies, and others were liable under the TVPRA for purchasing cobalt that was sourced by their suppliers through mining companies that used forced labor in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit affirmed the lower court’s dismissal of the case. On the venture element, the appeals court held that end-purchasers who had no direct relationship with, or operational involvement in, the mining operations where the abuses occurred had not participated in a venture within the meaning of the statute finding that they had merely bought a product at arm’s length. Apple Inc., 96 F.4th at 415–16.

The appeals court went further, finding that certain facts that plaintiff relied upon to establish the defendant’s “control,” including the commercial pressure held by defendants over the supplier and the contractual rights to inspect and conduct third-party audits of supplier facilities, were insufficient to transform a commercial relationship into venture-level participation.

Companies can draw two primary lessons from Apple Inc. First, the case confirms that downstream purchasers who lack operational entanglement with their suppliers are not, by virtue of that commercial relationship alone, participants in a venture under the TVPRA. Second, Apple Inc. signals that companies investing in robust supplier audit programs should not fear that those efforts will be turned against them as evidence of control.

The court made clear that having the contractual right to audit differs from exercising the kind of different risk profiles. But the doctrinal picture that emerges from the TVPRA case law demonstrates that courts rely heavily on the facts of a case to determine liability. Therefore, companies would be wise to operational control that transforms a buyer into a participant. Therefore, companies should not let fear of exposure to TVPRA liability deter them from proactively building a robust compliance program.

Companies with different supply chain structures, vendor relationships, and operating models face different risk profiles.

On the contrary, as explained in the section below, requiring supplier compliance with U.S. law is an integral part of any successful compliance program, as it both reduces the likelihood of forced labor occurring in the supply chain and preserves a company’s ability to defend itself against a TVPRA claim.

Framework for Reducing Exposure

Companies with different supply chain structures, vendor relationships, and operating models face resources where they matter most and to intervene before a compliance problem becomes a legal one.

- 2. Conduct Supplier or Vendor Due Diligence
- Before engaging with a new supplier or affiliate, companies should screen such potential vendors against restricted government entity and sanctions lists, review publicly available information about the supplier’s labor history or working conditions, ask the supplier directly for documentation of its compliance programs, and retain that information.
- Both the Department of Homeland Security and the Department of Labor have resources outlining goods, industries, and countries where the U.S. agencies suspect forced labor to be prevalent. Companies should create a record that demonstrates its diligence efforts and outlines the reasons why they did or did not proceed with the engagement.
- 3. Implement Strong Internal Policies, Monitor, and Enforce
- Companies should operationalize their supplier codes of con-

- duct and anti-forced labor policies through defined procedures, consistent monitoring of supplier conduct, and clear consequences for suppliers that fail to meet the company’s stated standards. Training for procurement and sourcing personnel should equip employees with specific “red flag” indicators of forced labor and establish a clear path for raising concerns to the appropriate personnel.
- 4. Include Enforceable Standards Into Vendor or Supplier Contracts
- Contractual provisions requiring suppliers to comply with applicable labor laws, prohibiting forced labor and granting company audit rights, serve two functions: they reduce the risk of forced labor occurring and they establish, for litigation purposes, that the company did not simply acquiesce or turn a blind eye to its suppliers’ practices.
- A company with a documented history of detailing and enforcing these obligations is better positioned to argue that it lacked the actual or constructive knowledge of specific violations that the statute requires.

proprietary tools built internally to perform tasks like identifying appropriate contractual templates and performing first pass reviews.

Even though AI-native firms may develop software as part of their business model, they primarily remain legal services organizations, and do not necessarily intend to develop all the tech they need in-house. Brown noted that Soxton has “far more,” attorneys than software engineers and said the firm procures back-office software for some functions.

Practice Areas, Clientele and Pricing

Beyond how they work, AI-native firms currently stand apart from their more traditional counterparts by the type of work they do and who they do it for. To date, these firms have largely concentrated on commercial and transactional work, which often encompasses more routine and repeatable tasks. Those types of matters are more well-suited to AI-powered tools than, for example, litigation, which can vary greatly depending on the unique facts of an individual case and which relies more heavily on interpersonal communication at some stages.

“There are certain types of litigation [where] there’s just a ton of human work, ... it’s two humans talking to each other, or multiple humans talking to each other, said Qadnud-Din. “It’s going to be hard to automate depositions. A lot of the time, in certain types of litigation, it’s just difficult to automate.”

Brown agreed that early examples of AI-native firms have been concentrated in transactional work, though she noted that AI tools are being successfully applied to a widening array of litigation tasks, opening up the possibility of new service delivery models.

“Folks are using [AI] to draft complaints, and I think plaintiffs’ law firms are really using it to identify cases,” she said. “I do think that there’s movement happening there.”

New AI-native firms also tend to use fixed fee pricing in lieu of the billable hour, and often hope to operate with a lower head count by automating work that might have traditionally been performed by associates and paralegals, potentially creating cost savings that can be passed on to clients.

This model helps them serve a different set of clients than those served by Big Law. Many AI-native firms tailor their services to small and early-stage companies, often in the tech and finance industries.

Brown, who was previously an associate at Cooley, noted that the clients Soxton hopes to serve differ in important ways from the Cooley clientele, resulting in important differences in what they want from their outside counsel.

“Our customers are different than who Cooley is focused on serving. I want the folks that would otherwise use Claude. I want the folks that would otherwise not take this legal issue to a lawyer,” she said. “I’m sure that there’s going to be things that [big firms] are able to do internally to keep up with their current clients’ demands.”

However, this focus on small companies may largely be a function of the greater comfort smaller enterprises and those in the tech industry have experimenting with new business models and relying more heavily on AI. Qadnud-Din noted that he believes General Legal’s model is applicable across industries, and Brown said she has already seen larger companies respond positively to the success small organizations have had working with AI native firms.

defenses: (1) a lack of notice and opportunity to be heard in the foreign jurisdiction; (2) an infirmity of proof establishing the misconduct; or (3) that the misconduct at issue in the foreign jurisdiction would not constitute misconduct in New York” (Matter of Milara, 194 AD3d 108, 110 [1st Dept 2021]).

The AGC maintains, and it is submitted, that none of the defenses apply herein. First, respondent was given proper notice and had an opportunity to answer the allegations in the New Jersey proceedings. Indeed, she appeared before the hearing panel in New Jersey and at oral arguments before the New Jersey Supreme Court while represented by counsel. Second, a review of the record establishes that there was no infirmity of proof. Respondent’s misconduct was investigated and litigated before the New Jersey Supreme Court, which had before it a lengthy record that included a hearing transcript, email correspondence, oral argument transcripts, briefing by respondent, and the hearing panel’s recommendation. Additionally, respondent’s legal malpractice action brought against her New Jersey counsel is still pending and is thus based on allegations and not facts and cannot be used to establish an infirmity of proof defense under 22 NYCRR 1240.13(b)(2). Third, the misconduct for which respondent was disciplined in New Jersey would constitute misconduct in New York in violation of Rules of Professional Conduct (22 NYCRR 1200.0) rule 1.7(a). Furthermore, respondent’s allegations of prosecutorial misconduct by the AGC are without merit, and her pending legal malpractice action against her New Jersey counsel does not serve as a basis to stay adjudication of the AGC’s motion pending conclusion of the action. Accordingly, because no defense can prevail, the imposition of reciprocal discipline is appropriate and the only issue that remains is what sanction to impose.

With respect to the sanction, in reciprocal disciplinary proceedings, this Court’s general rule is that “significant weight should be given to the sanction imposed by the jurisdiction where the misconduct occurred because the foreign jurisdiction has the greatest interest in fashioning sanctions for misconduct” (Matter of Blumenthal, 165 AD3d 85, 86 [1st Dept 2018], citing Matter of Jaffe, 78 AD3d 152 [1st Dept 2010]). “Only in rare instances will this Court depart from its general rule” (Matter of Tustaniwsky, 204 AD3d 162, 165 [1st Dept 2022]).

Thus, public censure, as requested by the AGC, is the appropriate sanction, as it is commensurate with the discipline imposed in New Jersey and generally accords with this Court’s precedent in cases involving comparable misconduct (see Matter of Mueller, 194 AD3d 68 [1st Dept 2021]; Matter of Baldinger, 109 AD3d 322 [1st Dept 2013]; Matter of Gold, 240 AD2d 74 [1st Dept 1998]).

Accordingly, the AGC’s motion

for reciprocal discipline should be granted, respondent publicly censured effective immediately, and respondent’s motion to dismiss denied in its entirety.

All concur.

1 The hearing panel found that in addition to the LLC, respondent’s retainer agreement designated both H.H. and J.O. “individually” as clients and that both H.H. and J.O. signed the agreement in their personal capacities.

2 The DRB noted that NRPC rule 1.7(a) which governs “general” conflicts of interest more appropriately encapsulated respondent’s misconduct in this matter, whereas NRPC rule 1.8, governs particular and specific conflicts of interest, none of which were applicable to this matter.

NEW YORK STATE COURT OF APPEALS

Court Invites Amicus Curiae Participation in:

Matter of Katonah-Lewisboro Union Free School District v. NYSE

Matter of Mahopac Central School District v. NYSED

On April 21, 2026, the Court granted leave to appeal in Matter of Katonah-Lewisboro Union Free School District v. New York State Education Department (APL-2026-00046) and Matter of Mahopac Central School District v. New York State Education Department (APL-2026-00047).

Both appeals involve the federal Individuals with Disabilities Education Act [IDEA] (20 USC § 1400) and the state New York Education Law § 4402 (5). Under the IDEA, public schools in New York must provide special education and related services to students with disabilities until the age of 22. Education Law § 4402 (5), however, provides that eligibility for such services ends at the conclusion of the school year in which the student turns 21.

In a federal case interpreting the IDEA and Connecticut law, the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that because Connecticut law allows individuals over the age of 21 to pursue publicly funded adult education programs, the state must likewise provide a comparable free and appropriate public education to students with disabilities between the ages of 21 and 22 (see A.R. v Connecticut State Bd. of Educ., 5 F4th 155 [2d Cir 2021]).

New York's State Education Department issued a formal opinion that A.R. is equally applicable in

New York and relied on that opinion in sustaining complaints against School Districts that determined students with disabilities were eligible for special education and related services only until the end of the school years in which the students turned 21.

School Districts commenced these proceedings to annul SED's determinations, and Supreme Court granted the petitions. The Appellate Division, Third Department, reversed.

The Court invites amicus curiae participation from those qualified and interested.

Amicus motions must comply with section 500.23 of the Court's Rules of Practice. Docket information, briefing schedules, filings and the oral argument date for these appeals are or will be available through the Court's Public Access and Search System (Court-PASS).

Questions may be directed to the Clerk's Office at 518-455-7705.
