IN BRIEF

Mintz Appoints Seasoned Litigator as New York Office Head

Mintz, Levin, Cohn, Ferris, Glovsky and Popeo's New York office has a new managing partner for the first time in 17 years, and the new leader is a litigator who has been a part of the firm for over two decades.

Frank Earley

Frank Earley has taken over as Mintz's New York managing partner from Stephen Gulotta, who is stepping down to focus on his practice as a member of the corporate and securities practice. In an interview, Earley said that the corporate practice is one of his priorities for the New York office's growth as the location's managing partner.

"We're always looking to be opportunistic," Earley said. "We'd like to grow the corporate department and we just made a pretty big splash with a team of six antitrust litigators from Cadwalader. Those are the types of things we're looking for. We're always looking for strong lawyers who want to come and work in a welcoming environment."

According to Earley, Mintz is ready to take on additional talent in any practice area. He said that the mergers and acquisitions space is particularly strong for the New York office at the moment, noting that despite being a litigator himself, he has started getting involved in some merger work as his own clients seek out deals.

While the majority of the non-litigation work is handled by Earley's colleagues, who focus on mergers and acquisitions, series A financing and debt work, he said that he continues to be a part of discussions with those clients of his and will continue to actively practice law while leading the New York office.

"My goals for the firm are to increase the size of the office, increase the work we're doing, and be intentional about getting the partners to collaborate and talk to each other," Earley said. "I really want us to be intentional about talking with each other about opportunities to work together."

Earley has been at Mintz for 22 years and spent 16 of them as a commercial litigation partner. Before joining the firm, he was an associate at Schulte Roth & Zabel from 1999 to 2004. He said he officially took over as New York Managing partner at Mintz on April 1, when the firm's new financial year began.

While he is now leading the office, Earley said that he and Gulotta still regularly speak about the proper course of action for the office and that the two had been meeting frequently in the run-up to the leadership change.

"Steve's a great friend and in many ways was a mentor to me throughout my career, so Steve's someone I can lean on," Earley said.

In a statement on Earley's transition into the New York managing partner role, Gulotta said he was "confident that Frank is the right leader" to build on the New York office's existing successes and growth. The New York office opened in 2000 with seven attorneys and now hosts over 140, according to the firm. It's currently the firm's second-largest office, trailing its original Boston location.

Mintz grew its revenue to over $767 million in 2025, buoyed by litigation and private equity work.

If Sullivan & Cromwell Can File an AI-Contaminated Brief, Is Risk-Proof Use of the Technology Even Possible?

BY RYAN HARROFF AND JON CAMPISI

SULLIVAN & Cromwell isn't the first law firm to have egg on its face after its lawyers were caught filing a court document replete with AI-induced hallucinations. But the fact that the mistake occurred at one of the most prestigious law firms in the world is a stark reminder to the rest of the legal industry of the risks associated with careless usage of the emerging technology.

COURTESY PHOTO

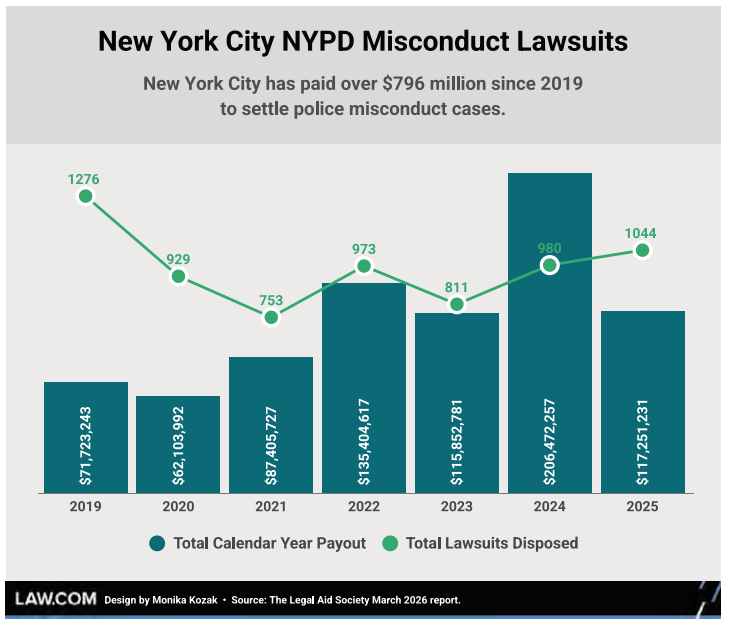
Sullivan & Cromwell is one of multiple Big Law firms to make such a gaffe as a result of artificial intelligence tools in recent months.

Sullivan & Cromwell's restructuring practice co-chair Andrew Dietderich had to apologize earlier this week to a bankruptcy judge in the Southern District of New York, after a document filed on behalf of a group of liquidators of British Virgin Islands entities collectively called Prince Global Holdings, included incorrect case citations as well as citations to entirely fictional cases.

Attorneys from Boies Schiller Flexner—who represent another party in the matter—alerted Sullivan & Cromwell to the mistake. Boies Schiller had its own mistake with AI-generated case citations last year in a case it brought against the Church of Scientology, a mistake which caused it to ask a court to let it file a corrected brief months after the fact.

A law firm leader who spoke with Law.com on the condition of anonymity said that mistakes like the one made by Sullivan & Cromwell raise ethical, reputational and economic issues for large prominent law firms. It is not new information that AI hallucinates, the leader said, so the fact that attorneys continue to file briefs with fictitious case citations makes their firm and the industry at large look bad, since, "Rule number one from first year of law school is don't cite fictional cases."

"The reputational concern is that it tells the court you didn't read the case and you didn't cite check your brief," the » Page 6



Lawmakers Continue To Push for State-Level Rollback of Qualified Immunity

BY BRIAN LEE

LOBBYISTS urged Albany lawmakers on Tuesday to eliminate qualified immunity, renewing a years-long push to revoke the judiciary-created doctrine shielding state government and law enforcement officials from civil liability.

A Legal Defense Fund organizer spoke of how the legal doctrine remains a barrier to justice for the family of Dante Taylor, who was killed by correction officers in Buffalo in 2017.

Assemblymember Pam Hunter, a high-ranking Democrat from Syracuse who sponsors her chamber's version of S176/A1402, said Taylor's case was among a number of "egregious acts these past several years."

Legal Defense Fund was among six organizations, including the Legal Aid Society and Innocence Project, advocating for the legislation to eliminate qualified immunity as a defense in state » Page 4

Small, Midsize Firms Outpaced Big Law in Lateral Hiring, As Firms Eyed Experience

BY DAN ROE

LAW FIRMS of all sizes increased their lateral hiring in 2025 for the second consecutive year, a Wednesday report from the National Association for Law Placement found, but small and midsize firms pursued lateral talent particularly aggressively.

Firms also prioritized experience in lateral hiring, with smaller firms heavily focusing on partner-level laterals and Big Law emphasizing lateral associates more than last year, according to a Tuesday NALP Foundation report on associate attrition.

"Trends in the lateral hiring market are particularly notable and align with broader industry reporting indicating that many law firms are moving toward more senior leverage models, with a growing share of their talent concentrated at higher levels of experience," NALP executive director Nikia Gray said in a Wednesday press release announc- » Page 4

New York's Top Court, in Split Decision, Reverses Murder Conviction

BY BRIAN LEE

A MORE than three-year delay between a fourth trial resulting in a murder conviction of a rival drug dealer in Manhattan was unjustifiably long, New York's top court said, in a divided ruling handed down Tuesday.

Judge Rivera

Court of Appeals Judge Jenny Rivera wrote for the 4-3 majority's order to overturn a second-degree murder charge, on speedy trial grounds, in the matter captioned People v. Travis Woods.

The case involves a 2006 shooting that resulted in the death of alleged rival drug dealer Barry Miller.

Rivera, joined by Chief Judge Rowan Wilson and Judges Shirley Troutman and Caitlin Halligan, said they were not persuaded by Manhattan prosecutor's contention that the delay before the fourth trial resulted from their » Page 4

Latest PBM Settlement to Reverberate Through Health Plans

BY BRENDAN PIERSON

THE U.S. Federal Trade Commission's recently announced settlement with CVS Health's Caremark over its insulin drug pricing will add to the ongoing shakeup of the pharmacy benefit manager industry and force health plans to rethink their prescription drug coverage.

Details of the proposed settlement, which CVS announced last month, are not yet public. But news reports say it is similar to a landmark deal reached in February with Cigna's Express Scripts, which will bar the company, in its standard plan offering, from favoring more expensive drugs over cheaper alternatives and require it to pass rebates it receives from drug companies entirely on to patients.

On the one hand, said Mintz, Levin, Cohn, Ferris, Glovsky and Popeo member Theresa Carnegie, the settlements "allow the health plans to demand certain structures and terms in their contracts."

But at the same time, she said, plans have already negotiated their prescription drug benefits based on a longstanding rebate model, and "these developments throw a wrench in that."

She added: "PBMs and health plans have a symbiotic relationship. There will be discomfort not only for PBMs but for health plans in the short term. ... They have just as much planning to do as PBMs."

Both settlements stem from the FTC's long-running lawsuit accusing Express Scripts, CVS and UnitedHealth's OptumRx of driving up the price of insulin drugs. No settlement with OptumRx has been announced so far.

PBMs, which act as intermediaries between drugmakers, health plans and pharmacies to negotiate drug prices and maintain formularies of covered drugs, have long been criticized for their opaque business practices. The FTC in its complaint accused them of favoring drugs with inflated list prices on their formularies so they could collect higher rebates, with patients bearing higher costs as a result.

DIEGO M. RADZINSCHI/ALM

The FTC's long-running lawsuit accusing Express Scripts, CVS and UnitedHealth's OptumRx of driving up the price of insulin drugs.

Critics of PBMs have touted the deal, along with new federal transparency requirements, as a way of bringing down drug costs, but it remains to be seen exactly what will take the place of the old rebate model.

Carnegie said that PBMs will likely try to make up for lost rebate income in part through the administrative fees they charge health plans and drug companies, although those fees can no longer be tied to list prices. That could involve "new and creative arrangements" in which they seek to charge drug companies fees for specific services, she said.

Notably, the Express Scripts settlement leaves open the option for health plans to negotiate nonstandard formulary agreements keeping the older rebate system in place. But Davis Wright Tremaine counsel Kara Maddalena said that would likely not be a common outcome, in part because of the high level of sophistication needed to negotiate an individualized agreement.

For most health plans, she said, "I just don't see a particular reason to explore the nonstandard formulary."

Maddalena said that it is now a "critical time" for plans on Express Scripts' standard formulary to start preparing for the settlement to take full effect in 2028.

"Right now is when plan sponsors are working with their consultants to look forward to their new formulary pricing," she said. "Plan sponsors are going to have to really become more sophisticated consumers of PBM services."

When it comes to the CVS settlement, which is not yet public, health plans will need to wait and see, Buchanan Ingersoll & Rooney attorneys wrote in a client alert.

"As the details emerge, stakeholders should closely monitor the situation to evaluate how these changes may affect compliance obligations, drug pricing strategies and consumer access to essential medications," they wrote.

A further source of unpredictability is that, even if Optum also eventually settles with the FTC, the agreements with the big three would not be binding on smaller PBMs, which account for about 20% of the market. But Maddalena said they would probably follow suit.

"I think that these large players with these significant restrictions are going to shape the smaller markets as well," she said. "They'll be seen as the leaders of the new market way of operating."

Carnegie agreed, also noting that all PBMs will be subject to the new transparency requirements.

"I think there will be a trickle-down effect and ultimately most PBMs will have to operate in the same way," she said.

Fed Chair Nominee Vows Independence as Trump Pressure Looms

BY DAN NOVAK

FEDERAL Reserve chair nominee Kevin Warsh repeatedly stressed to a Senate panel Tuesday the importance of maintaining independence and credibility at the nation's central bank while disputing that he would lower interest rates at President Donald Trump's direction.

"The president never asked me to predetermine, commit, fix, decide on any interest rate decision in any of our discussions, nor would I ever agree to do so," Warsh told the Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee.

Trump has threatened the central bank's independence in unprecedented ways, such as by opening criminal probes into the Fed and chair Jerome Powell over the renovation costs of the agency's headquarters. Trump also attempted to fire Democratic Fed Gov. Lisa Cook on allegations of mortgage fraud, which Cook has denied.

GRAEME SLOAN/BLOOMBERG

Kevin Warsh, President Donald Trump's nominee for chair of the Federal Reserve, during his Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee confirmation hearing Tuesday.

Warsh, a financier and former Fed governor, said it is perfectly acceptable for politicians to voice their opinions over Fed policy but that he will be "strictly independent" on monetary policy.

"President Trump expresses it quite publicly without surrogates or subterfuge—but presidents want lower rates," he said. "But Fed independence is up to the Fed. Fed leadership has to make a decision about what's the right thing to do."

In fact, Trump—who has publicly sought to pressure the Fed to lower rates—said earlier Tuesday in an interview with CNBC that he would be disappointed if Warsh did not cut rates immediately upon being confirmed.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts, the committee's ranking Democrat, said Trump would never nominate a Fed chair who disagreed with him about rate cuts and accused Warsh of being the president's "sock puppet." In a testy exchange with Warren, Warsh would not say that Trump lost the 2020 presidential election nor whether he disagrees with any of the president's policies.

"If you can't answer these questions, you don't have the courage and you don't have the independence," Warren said.

Warren and other Democrats also raised ethics questions about Warsh's financial assets, which are worth about $100 million, according to initial disclosures. Warsh said he would "divest all of those assets" but did not provide further details about the holdings.

He also did not say whether he has investments in companies related to the Trump family, Chinese businesses or those that intersected with Jeffrey Epstein.

Warsh, when asked how he would approach the job, said the Fed must reform how it handles monetary policy in times of relative stability and that the Fed has lost credibility when it tries to expand its reach beyond its authorized limits. He said the Fed's job during a crisis is to provide liquidity and argued that in today's "normal times" reforms should focus on ensuring the central bank is better prepared for the next downturn.

"We have a window where the economy is improving, but I would say more improvement is still possible," Warsh added. "And it's during this policy that we need to look introspectively, look fundamentally at reform."

The nominee also criticized the Fed for failing to quell inflation after the pandemic and missing its target.

"We are still dealing with the legacy of the policy errors in 2021 and 2022," he said. "Once you let inflation take hold in the economy, it's more expensive and harder to bring it down."

Powell's term as chair ends May 15 but he has said he will stay on until a successor is confirmed. Trump has threatened to fire Powell if he does not step down.

Trump's incursion into the Fed has put Warsh's nomination in jeopardy and it is unclear when or if he will be confirmed. Sen. Thom Tillis, R- North Carolina, said he will not advance Warsh's nomination until the White House ends its investigation into Powell, which he views as undermining the bank's independence.

"You have extraordinary credentials," Tillis told Warsh. "Let's get rid of this investigation so I can support your nomination."

Table Games Dealers Flush Casinos With New Wage Lawsuits

BY CHARLES TOUTANT

CASINOS in Atlantic City are coping with a crop of class suits alleging that table games dealers should not be classified as tipped workers. The suits seek to end mandatory tip-pooling policies that require the would-be class members to share gratuities with coworkers.

Seven suits were filed by Stueve Siegel Hanson of Kansas City, Missouri, along with the McClelland Law Firm in Liberty, Missouri, and Winebrake & Santillo of Dresher, Pennsylvania, in mid-March. The suits seek relief under the Fair Labor Standards Act and the New Jersey Wage and Hour Law on behalf of dealers of games such as roulette, blackjack and craps.

Carolyn Richmond of Fox Rothschild, representing the Golden Nugget, said in a statement, "The Golden Nugget takes great pride in its outstanding team and works very hard to make sure its compensation system is fair, competitive and compliant. While it respects everyone's right to avail themselves of our legal system, we think this claim is frivolous and we will demonstrate that in court."

Fisher & Phillips has signed on to represent the Hard Rock Hotel & Casino Atlantic City and the Ballys Atlantic City Hotel & Casino. That firm's Kathleen Caminiti declined to comment on the litigation. Cozen O'Connor is representing the Borgata Hotel Casino and Spa, Tropicana Atlantic City and Harrah's Resort Atlantic City. They did not respond to requests for comment. No counsel has entered an appearance for Resorts Atlantic City.

The suits have been assigned to U.S. District Judge Edward Kiel.

The plaintiffs allege that the tip-pooling policy employed by the casinos is illegal, because it results in the plaintiffs and class members getting paid far less than New Jersey's minimum wage of $15.92 per hour.

ALAN/ADOBE STOCK

Tropicana Hotel and Casino on the boardwalk in Atlantic City

Table games dealers typically put in 60 minutes of time dealing, followed by a 20-minute rest period. This rest time is on the clock, because the dealers are under their employer's control and are unable to leave the premises, but they are precluded from making tips because they are not at the tables, the suits allege.

"The upshot of this structure is that, before accounting for idle time, pre- and post-shift time, and waiting time, table games dealers automatically spend 25% of their time on nontipped work. Importantly, [defendants include] all dealer time in the tip pool, including the nontipped work," the suits allege.

"This violates the New Jersey Wage and Hour Law. New Jersey Law makes clear that this nontipped time is not eligible for the tip credit because it exceeds 20% of the dealers' working time in every workweek," the suits allege.

"Importantly, it also voids the tip pool entirely. New Jersey law treats dealers as nontipped workers who do not customarily and regularly receive tips for the time where, as here, the dealers spend more than 20% of the workweek on nontipped work. [Defendants'] decision to include this time in the tip pool means that [defendants are] requiring table games dealers to pool tips with employees who do not customarily and regularly receive tips while also claiming a tip credit, which voids the tip pool and the tip credit under both the NJWHL and the FLSA," according to the complaints.

Tip pooling in casinos has repeatedly prompted litigation, and has become an active area within wage-and-hour law.

In December 2025, a federal judge in the Middle District of Pennsylvania approved a $2.3 million settlement of a class action against the Mount Airy Casino Resort in Mount Pocono, Pennsylvania. In that case, class members alleged that Mount Airy violated the federal FLSA by taking a tip credit to allow the casino to count a portion of employees' tips toward their federal minimum wage obligations.

Judicial Ethics Opinions

The Advisory Committee on Judicial Ethics responds to written inquiries from New York state's approximately 3,600 judges and justices, as well as hundreds of judicial hearing officers, support magistrates, court attorney-referees, and judicial candidates (both judges and non-judges seeking election to judicial office). The committee interprets the Rules Governing Judicial Conduct (22 NYCRR Part 100) and, to the extent applicable, the Code of Judicial Conduct. The committee consists of 28 current and retired judges, and is co-chaired by the Honorable Debra L. Givens, an acting justice of the supreme court in Erie County, and the Honorable Lillian Wan, an associate justice of the appellate division, second department.

Opinion: 25-164

Digest: (1) When a judge concludes, based on communications he/she received directly from Judge A, that Judge A has committed a substantial violation of the Rules Governing Judicial Conduct and that the violation is so serious that it calls into question Judge A's fitness to hold judicial office, he/she must report Judge A to the Commission on Judicial Conduct.

(2) Where a judge lacks information indicating a substantial likelihood that Judge B has committed a substantial violation of the Rules Governing Judicial Conduct, he/she need not take any action, but may do so in his/her sole discretion.

Rules: 22 NYCRR 100.1; 100.2; 100.2(A); 100.3(D)(1); Opinions 23-243; 22-115; 22-113; 21-19; 18-66; 11-08.

The inquiring judge has received multiple communications from Judge A expressing dissatisfaction with Judge A's current judicial assignment and sharing ideas about strategies, such as refusing to set bail, that might "force" court administrators to reassign Judge A. In the inquiring judge's view, Judge A has also "spoken and acted in a manner that shows bias against the district attorney's office." Shortly after a prosecutor criticized Judge A's judicial temperament on the record, the inquirer received further communications from Judge A claiming that a longstanding courtroom set-up was unethical and refusing to call cases until the set-up was changed. After reviewing these communications, the inquiring judge has "serious questions about Judge A's ability to be fair and impartial, as well as about [Judge A's] appreciation of [his/her] fundamental responsibilities as a judge." Subsequently, the inquiring judge learned from an administrative or supervising judge that Judge B was likewise refusing to call cases until the courtroom set-up was changed, but the inquiring judge is "not aware"

Bad Faith Disregard of Benefits and Science In Federal Environmental Deregulation

By Michael B. Gerrard

Since the beginning of the Reagan administration in 1981, federal agencies have used cost-benefit analysis when making important policy decisions, especially when issuing regulations. In the years since then the methodologies have been refined and enshrined in White House guidance.

The second Trump administration has upended these practices by often ignoring the benefits of regulations and only considering the costs. In doing so it often claims that there are such uncertainties about the benefits that they should be disregarded. It uses these claims in support of repealing or softening regulations that prior administrations found would save thousands of human lives.

If scientific uncertainty was the reaal reason for disregarding benefits, a good faith response would be to conduct more research to reduce the uncertainty. Instead, the Trump administration has systematically cancelled research programs, closed laboratories, fired scientists, distorted research results, and generally attacked the scientific enterprise. It is hard to escape the conclusion that this disregard of benefits is a bad faith effort to reduce regulations that are costly to the industries the administration favors.

This disregard of benefits is occurring throughout the federal and some state governments. The Department of Health and Human Services under Secretary Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. is famously doing so with regard to vaccines. This article is focused on environmental regulations and on the administration's assault on environmental science, especially climate science.

Disregarding Benefits

The disregard of benefits in cost-benefit analysis, and the excuse that scientific uncertainty is a major reason, have been analyzed in an article to appear in the Harvard Environmental Law Review by NYU Law School Dean Emeritus Richard L. Revesz, who was administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs during the Biden administration.

As Dean Revesz has written, while the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) under the first Trump administration revoked many regulations, under the second it has gone much further and "simply declared that, at least for now, it would no longer seek to quantify or monetize the health benefits of air pollution reductions," such as the number of premature deaths averted as a result of the regulations.

> The insurance industry relies heavily on climate data and projections in assessing risk and pricing policies; some in it are among those already expressing alarm about these developments.

One important example concerns fine particulate matter (PM2.5), an air pollutant that is known to cause or aggravate respiratory illnesses including lung cancer, cardiovascular diseases, neurological issues, and other disorders. Numerous studies have found that PM2.5 is a non-threshold pollutant, meaning that there is no safe level of exposure.

Dean Revesz found that EPA mounted "a multi-front attack on the scientific and analytical underpinnings of PM2.5 benefit analysis," and did so "without pointing to any scientific study suggesting that PM2.5 was a threshold contaminant or directly attacking the peer reviewed studies supporting the no-threshold approach." Citing "scientific uncertainty," EPA has used this approach to revoke or weaken several regulations that would control emissions of PM2.5 from power plants and other sources.

Another example of considering the costs but not the benefits of a regulation occurred on Feb. 12, 2026 when President Trump and EPA Administrator Lee Zeldin announced the rescission of the endangerment finding that was the basis for EPA's use of the Clean Air Act to regulate greenhouse gases (GHGs), and the repeal of the GHG emission standards for motor vehicles. At their press conference, the President stood in front of a poster that read "Saving $1.3 Trillion for the American Taxpayer."

That figure came from the regulatory impact analysis that EPA released that evening. Table A-1 in that document says that, if the motor vehicle standards are rescinded, $1.09 trillion would be saved from reduced vehicle costs, and another $200 billion from reduced electric vehicle purchases and lowered spending on charging infrastructure. However, the same table showed that without the standards $1.43 trillion in costs would be incurred from increased fuel purchases, vehicle repair and maintenance, insurance, traffic congestion and noise, and an additional $40 billion in costs from energy security, refueling time, and drive value.

In other words, the $1.3 trillion in savings (what was displayed on the poster and in the statements by both Mr. Trump and Mr. Zeldin) are smaller than the $1.44 trillion in costs, which they never acknowledged.

In conducting cost-benefit analysis, for the past 30 years EPA has valued each statistical life at around $11.7 million. » Page 8

ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE

When AI Builds the Business, What Can Still Be Protected as a Trade Secret?

By Randi Leath

Artificial intelligence is rapidly changing how businesses are created and operated. Entrepreneurs and companies increasingly rely on generative AI tools to develop marketing strategies, write code, design products, analyze markets, and even shape core business models. As these tools become embedded in day-to-day operations, a fundamental question arises:

When a business is built, at least in part, through generative AI systems trained on vast amounts of publicly available data and operated by third-party platforms, what, if anything, can still qualify as a protectable trade secret?

At first glance, trade secret law appears flexible enough to accommodate this shift. Unlike copyright and patent, trade secret protection does not depend on human authorship. Information may qualify as a trade secret so long as it derives independent economic value from not being generally known or readily ascertainable and is subject to reasonable efforts to maintain its secrecy. Generative AI, however, places pressure on each element of that framework, particularly in the context of AI-generated trade secrets. While AI does not eliminate trade secret protection, it complicates the analysis at every stage of a trade secret's lifecycle, including its creation, its use, and its preservation. In many cases, the use of AI may not merely threaten trade secret protection. It may prevent it from arising in the first instance.

Readily Ascertainable In the Age of AI

The first challenge arises from the information's very creation. The central question is whether AI-assisted outputs are "readily ascertainable." Trade secret law asks whether a competitor could acquire or reproduce the information through proper means without significant time, effort, or expense.

Historically, what qualified as "readily ascertainable" was shaped by the limits of human effort, ingenuity, and time. Generative AI removes many of those constraints.

Where widely available AI systems can generate similar outputs in response to routine prompting, the time, effort, and expense required to replicate a particular result may be negligible. If a competitor, armed with comparable knowledge and access to similar tools, can arrive at substantially the same output with ease through ordinary use of those systems, it is unlikely that the information will be treated as anything other than readily ascertainable.

This is not a novel concern. Much of the current commentary has focused on AI's ability to piece together existing proprietary information from public sources. A commonly cited example is whether a system could reconstruct something like Coca-Cola's famously guarded recipe by synthesizing publicly available data. Those concerns are well founded. As generative AI systems improve, their ability to aggregate, infer, and reconstruct sensitive information from diffuse sources raises obvious risks for holders of traditional trade secrets.

The problem becomes even more pronounced where the information at issue is itself generated using AI. In that setting, the system has already performed the analytical work of identifying patterns, synthesizing inputs, and producing a usable output. To the extent those systems are trained on user interactions, including both inputs and outputs, they are not only capable of reaching similar results again, but of doing so more efficiently over time.

As these systems continue to improve, their ability to replicate outputs through ordinary prompting will only increase. Advances in pattern recognition, inference, and large-scale data processing make it increasingly plausible that an AI system, given access to publicly available information and commonsense prompting, could arrive at results that closely resemble what a business considers proprietary with ease.

Regulatory developments may accelerate this trend. Emerging transparency laws, such as California's Artificial Intelligence Training Data Transparency law, require developers to disclose key information about the datasets used to train their models, including the nature of the data, when it was collected, and how it is used in training.

As these requirements expand, they may make it easier for competitors to understand how leading systems are built and to develop models trained on similar or overlapping datasets. In turn, this may increase the likelihood that different systems produce similar outputs in response to similar prompts, further reducing the effort required to replicate AI-assisted results.

In that environment, the line between proprietary insight and readily reproducible output becomes increasingly difficult to maintain.

This shift has significant implications for the types of information that can realistically be protected. Categories of business information that have historically been treated as protectable, such as internal processes, pricing models, customer segmentation strategies, and operational frameworks, may increasingly fall into the category of information that is readily ascertainable. ties for my clients," Sobel, who will reside in the firm's New York City office, said in a statement. "Sills Cummis' platform is very well suited to practical, strategic, and efficient client service for operating companies. While Sills Cummis at about 150 attorneys is smaller than Brown Rudnick, the number of lawyers focused in my area of practice is not materially different. I cannot think of a matter that Sills Cummis' IP team would not be equipped to handle."

Jason M. Sobel

Richard H. Epstein

Sobel's clients will be joining him in moving to Sills Cummis, with the firm's managing partner-elect Richard Epstein adding that Sobel will be a great resource for the firm's international clients including those in Asia.

"Jason has extensive experience in IP litigation and trade secrets, providing great depth to our clients who expect aggressive representation at better price points," Epstein said in a statement."

According to Sobel's profile at Sills Cummis, his former clients include life sciences company Merck, technology company Fujifilm, and Asia-based Nomura Securities International.

Looking at IP practice trends, Sobel has seen ongoing growth in demand in the trade secrets area of his practice, a trend that he said has grown over the past two decades.

"We are still in the midst of about a 20 year trend of exponential growth in trade secret case filings," Sobel said. "Clients are increasingly aware of trade secret risk, and there is need for advice across a diverse range of business operations. I built and maintained a very active trade secret practice at Stroock that I brought to Brown Rudnick, and now I am looking forward to continuing to be active in that area of my practice with my new and former colleagues."

Epstein, meanwhile, noted that clients are becoming more price-conscious in the IP legal services space, stressing that both domestic and international clients are "looking for aggressive IP representation without having to pay Am Law 100 prices."

In recent weeks, Sills Cummis has also taken steps to grow out its real estate and litigation departments, adding two attorneys to each group as of April 10. The firm has additionally brought on an of counsel and associate in its IP practice, with future plans to grow in its core practices of litigation, corporate, real estate, and bankruptcy.

"We are taking additional space in our New York City office to meet our continued growth. We continue to look for opportunities to expand in both New York City and New Jersey," Epstein said in terms of future geographic growth.

In response to a request for comment, Brown Rudnick spokesperson Meghan Orencole said "We are grateful for Jason's contributions to the firm and we wish him well."

NYC's Meister Seelig & Schuster Adds Criminal Defense Attorney to Lead Expansion Into Nashville

Manhattan-based Meister Seelig & Schuster had joined with a longtime criminal defense attorney to enter the Nashville, Tennessee, market as part of a long-term growth strategy that includes its first foray into the nation's interior in its three-decade history.

The firm expanded to the growing market with the addition of veteran criminal defense attorney Kimberly Hodde to lead the new office, the firm announced Tuesday.

Hodde will direct operations in Nashville from the midsize firm's new office in the midst of historic Music Row, while also chairing its national criminal defense practice, and co-chairing its white-collar and criminal defense group.

The announcement follows the firm's recent rebrand to Meister Seelig & Schuster from Meister Seelig & Fein after litigation and crisis management partner Mitch Schuster was elevated to named partner.

Schuster chairs the firm's litigation department and crisis management practice and has represented numerous celebrities in the sports and entertainment industries. He said in a statement that the addition of Hodde and her solo practice "strengthens our national white collar and criminal defense capabilities while establishing an important presence in Nashville as we continue to expand the firm's reach."

"The addition of the Nashville office represents the type of strategic growth we envisioned when we announced the firm's transition to Meister Seelig & Schuster," Schuster said. "Kim has built an exceptional criminal defense practice and is widely respected for her trial experience and leadership in the defense bar.

"Combining our platforms strengthens our national white collar and criminal defense capabilities while establishing an important presence in Nashville as we continue to expand the firm's reach," he said.

Its Nashville move follows its expansion to Los Angeles in 2023 with its combination with boutique crisis management firm Chassman & Seelig.

Hodde said the firm chose to open in Nashville because the city is "exploding in population"—which means the court activity in the city is "also exploding."

"What we're seeing is more and more very large-scale civil litigation happening in Nashville that a lot of time you might have just seen brought in New York or Los Angeles," Hodde said. "Those cases are now being brought in Nashville."

She said Nashville and Atlanta are the largest "hubs" of criminal law activity in the Southeast.

"Our cases are just booming and we do an incredible volume of work," Hodde said of the Meister firm. "We hope to be able to reach a broader audience but, by landing in Nashville, we hope to really tap into the growing market here."

She noted she will be responsible for the hiring and expansion of the Nashville office—which the firm is planning to eventually mirror its New York headquarters in total practice areas offered. The office will have four total attorneys by September and is actively recruiting for more—with the goal of having attorneys in such areas as real estate, estate planning, corporate litigation, intellectual property and family law, she said.

"I'm excited to be a part of their expansion into Nashville and I think it's going to be ... a lot of work but a huge success," Hodde said. Hodde, who has practiced in Nashville for 30 years, noted she had been discussing the move with the Meister firm for about four years before joining in March.

Hodde's national practice focuses on representing individuals and businesses primarily in federal court in criminal investigations and prosecutions, including matters involving bank and health care fraud, tax offenses, money laundering and other federal charges.

Kim Hodde

She also has represented clients in the entertainment industry, which dovetails somewhat with Meister Seelig's past work—including recent representation of such celebrities as Cardi B in the launch of her signature hair care brand called Grow-Good Beauty.

Schuster and Meister Seelig's Kevin Fritz represented actor and director Justin Baldoni in a federal lawsuit against actress Blake Lively and husband Ryan Reynolds that was linked to her allegations of sexual harassment against Baldoni during the production of the movie "It Ends With Us."

"With me having the back-end support that I'm going to have at Meister Seelig, and with the practice growing in the way that it is, we're going to be able to handle such an expansive volume of matters that we haven't really been able to handle," Hodde said.

Hodde said she had been a solo practitioner for three decades and had offers to join other firms but had never found "a good fit." She said no other firm had "matched the level of excellence, expertise and shared ambition" that the Meister firm offered.

"They hire nothing but A-plus lawyers," she said.

"As much as I hate to admit it, I'm a bit of a 'lawyer snob,'" she said. "I really want to make sure that, if I'm going to hitch my wagon to a larger group, I want to make sure that everybody in the group is really kind of a premier, quality kind of lawyer and that's exactly what I found with this group."

Ontario and New York Take Different Approaches to Ticket Resale Prices

By Billy Cooper

Governments on both sides of the border are once again grappling with a persistent feature of the modern live-event economy: the rapid resale of tickets at prices far exceeding their original cost.

Ontario's recently proposed amendments to its ticketing laws, introduced in advance of upcoming FIFA World Cup matches in Toronto, represent one of the most direct regulatory responses to date. The proposal would prohibit the resale of tickets above their original all-in purchase price, including fees and taxes, and would authorize penalties of up to $10,000 for violations.

If enacted, the measure would place Ontario in sharp contrast with New York, where the law takes a markedly different approach.

New York does not impose a cap on ticket resale prices. Instead, its statutory framework—set forth in Article 25 of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law—accepts the existence of a secondary market and focuses on regulating the manner in which that market operates. The law emphasizes transparency, consumer choice, and enforcement against practices that distort access to tickets in the first instance.

This divergence reflects two distinct regulatory philosophies.

Ontario's proposal proceeds from the premise that excessive resale pricing constitutes a form of consumer harm warranting direct intervention. By limiting resale prices to the original transaction cost, the province seeks to remove the financial incentive for speculative purchasing and rapid flipping of tickets. The rule is clear in its intent and application: resale is permitted, but profit is not.

New York's framework, by contrast, does not treat elevated resale prices as inherently improper. Rather, it is designed to ensure that consumers are not misled or restricted within the marketplace. Secondary sellers must disclose that tickets are being resold and must present pricing information in a clear and conspicuous manner prior to the completion of a transaction. At the same time, the law protects the transferability of tickets by limiting the ability of primary sellers to impose restrictive resale conditions, particularly through paperless ticketing systems that would otherwise confine transactions to a single platform.

New York also addresses conduct that interferes with fair access to the primary market. The use of automated purchasing software to circumvent ticket limits is prohibited, and the resale of tickets acquired through such means is subject to enforcement by the attorney general. Civil penalties may be imposed, and certain violations may give rise to criminal liability. These provisions reflect a targeted effort to prevent manipulation without prescribing the ultimate price at which tickets may be resold.

> As demand for live events continues to grow, and as global events place additional pressure on ticket markets, the effectiveness of these differing frameworks will likely come under closer examination.

The contrast between the two approaches is significant.

Ontario's proposed cap offers a straightforward response to widely publicized instances of extreme resale pricing, particularly in connection with high-demand sporting events and major concert tours. By directly limiting resale prices, the province seeks to align the market more closely with consumer expectations of fairness and accessibility.

At the same time, price controls may present practical enforcement challenges and risk displacing resale activity to less transparent or unregulated channels, where consumer protections are diminished and the likelihood of fraud may increase.

New York's model, in contrast, prioritizes market function and consumer information. It permits prices to rise in response to demand but seeks to ensure that transactions occur within a framework that is transparent and free from manipulation. The tradeoff is that, even in a compliant marketplace, prices may reach levels that place tickets beyond the reach of many consumers. The law addresses the integrity of the transaction, rather than its outcome.

These competing models underscore a broader policy question: whether consumer protection is best achieved by regulating price or by regulating process.

For now, New York has chosen the latter course. Article 25, which governs much of the state's ticketing regime, has been extended through 2029, signaling a legislative preference for continuity rather than structural change. Ontario, by contrast, appears poised to test a more interventionist approach at a moment when public scrutiny of ticket pricing has reached a new high.

As demand for live events continues to grow, and as global events place additional pressure on ticket markets, the effectiveness of these differing frameworks will likely come under closer examination. Whether New York ultimately revisits its approach may depend less on legal theory than on the practical realities faced by consumers attempting to access the events themselves.

ing the lateral hiring report.

Firms with 250 or fewer lawyers increased lateral hiring by an average of 44% in 2025 compared to 2024, whereas the average lateral hiring increase across NALP's total cohort of 305 law firms was 16%.

Conversely, law firms with more than 1,000 lawyers increased lateral hiring by 11%, and firms in the middle—with 251 to 1,000 lawyers—posted a 20% lateral hiring uptick.

In total, the lateral hiring increase was driven by associates, whose movements accounted for 58.2% of total laterals. Partners accounted for 22.3% of lateral hiring, and staff attorneys and counsel moves made up the difference.

Last year's shift toward experience in lateral hiring was also more pronounced among smaller firms, although it was still widespread: Partner and associate lateral hiring increased by 17.8% and 17.1%, respectively, across all firms in 2025, marking a departure from 2024, when associate lateral hiring grew by 25% compared to 2% lateral partner hiring growth.

But at firms with 250 or fewer lawyers, lateral partner hiring was up by 88.7%, whereas firms with more than 1,000 lawyers increased lateral partner hiring by just 10.1%.

A similar trend appeared in the Tuesday NALP Foundation report that focused on associate hiring and attrition. That report found that firms with 251 to 500 lawyers hired more lateral associates than they did entry-level associates in 2025, while firms with 1,000 lawyers or more hired a roughly even split.

Tuesday's report showed that overall associate hiring increased by 4% in 2025, although in contrast to 2024, lateral associate hiring slightly outstripped entry-level hiring.

Meanwhile, the associate attrition rate held at 19%, down from the 20% attrition rate observed in 2024.

About half of associate departures in 2025 were deemed "unwanted" by participating firms, a proportion that also changed minimally from 2024.

Murder

good-faith efforts to reassess and reinvestigate the case, which was hampered by the death of a key eyewitness.

Legal observers view the majority jurists as the court's more liberal bloc, while its more conservative jurists signed onto Judge Madeline Singas' dissent.

Singas, a former Nassau County district attorney, wrote that the majority short-circuited criminal procedure by granting the defense's speedy-trial motion without a hearing.

Woods had been arrested and indicted for participating in a drug-trafficking organization, including the 2006 fatal shooting.

He was convicted and sentenced to nine years' incarceration on drug offenses, but the jury deadlocked on murder and weapons possession charges, and so prosecutors retried him multiple times. Juries were unable to reach a verdict.

Matthew Bova, a supervising attorney for the Center for Appellate Litigation, secured a fifth trial for Woods.

During March 11 arguments in the Bronx, Bova argued that prosecutors holding "a series of meetings for 32 months to decide whether to retry someone a third time is too long and is unreasonable."

Assistant District Attorney Christian Rose had argued that the extreme act of dismissing a murder charge would be unwarranted, since Woods hadn't suffered additional pre-trial incarceration, and his ability to defend himself wasn't impaired by their delay.

Bova and a spokesperson for the Manhattan DA's office did not respond to requests for comment on Wednesday.

Rivera wasn't persuaded by the contention that the bulk of the delay had been caused by the series of meetings within the DA's office, meetings that had been requested by defense counsel who had sought a dismissal.

"The three-year delay was substantial, and the record contains only vague assertions of the prosecution's reasons for its delay," Rivera wrote. "Although the serious nature of the charges weighs in the prosecution's favor, this factor's importance is diminished by the fact that the prosecution had already unsuccessfully tried the case three times."

Two people had identified Woods as the shooter, including one who testified for prosecutors during the first and third trials—but died before the fourth trial.

Rivera wrote that the read-back of his testimony diminished the defense's attempts to challenge his credibility.

On the other hand, Singas said both parties were deprived of the opportunity to resolve factual questions from a thin record of approximately 30 calendar calls on the case's status.

Singas said prosecutors should have had the opportunity to litigate reasons for delays of trials.

The decision, she said, denied both parties the opportunity to account for additional evidence found through a reinvestigation.

Singas added that the decision may have lasting, damaging consequences, even for defendants, as she accused the majority of "cherry-picking a version of the facts to conclude that a speedy trial violation occurred while ignoring material and contradictory portions of the record."

Judges Michael Garcia and Anthony Cannataro signed on to the dissent.

The top court frequently hears speedy trial appeals, including a less controversial one written by Garcia on Tuesday, which unanimously granted a new trial to a person accused of a misdemeanor assault of a correction officer on Riker's Island.

There have been more controversial reversals in recent years, including one in 2023 by Wilson, handed down just a month before he was confirmed as chief judge.

Wilson's opinion in People v. Regan overturned a rape conviction on speedy trial grounds, and at the time it resulted in a political firestorm from victims' advocates who urged the state Senate to reject Wilson's confirmation, in light of the controversial ruling.

Members of the defense bar praised Wilson's courage to apply the law, despite the optics of the decision.

Immunity

cases in which victims have had their constitutional or civil rights violated.

The groups were also urging state lawmakers to reject Gov. Kathy Hochul's efforts through the budget process to codify qualified immunity for the first time in state history.

Hunter, her chamber's sixth-ranked Democrat, urges the advocates to press lawmakers who may have a sense of unease speaking about the revocation of protections for government employees, "or who might not be courageous enough to put their name on a piece of legislation."

Another advocate, state Sen. Zellnor Myrie, D-Brooklyn, spoke of his advocacy for eliminating qualified immunity from the perspectives of an attorney, a lawmaker and a victim who sued the New York Police Department in 2021 after he was pepper-sprayed and detained during a BLM protest.

Myrie's federal civil rights suit was settled in 2023 for $415,000, of which he and a former state lawmaker were paid a combined $30,000, and their attorneys $385,000.

From his attorney's lens, Myrie said qualified immunity should be eliminated as a creation of the courts, while as a lawmaker, it would curb ongoing immigration enforcement efforts, meeting "a moment where we have a federal administration literally sending law enforcement to our communities to abuse and kidnap our people."

Progressive lawmakers have been advocating for abolishing qualified immunity since the height of the BLM movement in 2020, and a state-level repeal would align with New York City's elimination in 2021, a move that has led to a sharp increase in police brutality litigation in the city.

New York City is considered the first major U.S. city to repeal qualified immunity. In 2025 alone, the city saw a surge of more than 1,000 settlements of police misconduct claims, its highest reported number since 2019. Payouts since then have exceeded $117 million.

On the other side of the debate, prominent defense attorney and constitutional scholar Alan Dershowitz has signaled his support for immunity protections for police and government.

The prolific author, who declined to comment on the topic when contacted by Law.com on Tuesday, has argued that courts should follow Supreme Court precedents that frequently grant immunity to officers.

According to published reports, Dershowitz has called efforts to renounce the government protections an "outrage."

Corporate Update

Former Hilton, Molson Coors Legal Chief Joins Century-Old Firm Riding Sustainable Energy Wave

BY TRUDY KNOCKLESS

AFTER serving as legal chief of two of the nation's best-known consumer brands, Hilton Worldwide and Molson Coors, Anne-Marie D'Angelo has taken the legal reins of Littelfuse, a 99-year-old electronics company that isn't a household name but is growing at a clip that's turning heads on Wall Street.

COURTESY PHOTO

Anne-Marie D'Angelo, chief legal officer and corporate secretary of Littelfuse

Chicago-based Littelfuse was primarily a fusemaker until 2010, when its board and executive team made the savvy call that the company should leverage its global leadership position in circuit protection to expand into the power control and sensing markets.

That strategy, implemented partly through acquisitions, has been a resounding success. Just over the last decade, revenue has tripled to $2.4 billion, swelling the publicly traded company's market capitalization to $10 billion.

It helped that the broadening of the company's product offerings coincided with a global surge in investments in sustainable energy infrastructure and electric vehicle production, as well as soaring demand for construction of new data centers to power artificial intelligence.

D'Angelo, who will serve as chief legal officer and corporate secretary, comes to the role with deep M&A and governance experience.

Most recently, she served as general counsel of hotel giant Hilton Worldwide from September 2023 to September 2024. That was followed by a three-month stint as special adviser to Hilton Worldwide's CEO.

Before that, she spent 17 months at Molson Coors, where she served as chief legal and government affairs officer.

Earlier, she was legal chief for the » Page 6

ADM Legal Vet Joins Turnaround Team at Sodexo

BY MICHAEL GENNARO

SODEXO, the French food services and facilities management giant, has named Orla Muldoon as general counsel for North America, its largest market and one that has long underperformed.

Sodexo's performance woes have been so serious that the Paris-based company in October appointed a new CEO, Thierry Delaporte, and soon thereafter he took direct control of the North American operation.

Muldoon is joining Sodexo from the agricultural processing giant Archer-Daniels Midland, where over 12 years she held a string of high-profile legal posts, from chief counsel for Europe, the Middle East, India and Africa to chief counsel for compliance risk management.

Earlier, she spent seven years at Kellogg, where she was chief counsel for Kellogg Europe.

"I'm excited to join Sodexo at such a pivotal moment for the company," Muldoon said in a statement. "Sodexo's purpose-driven culture and commitment to responsible growth strongly align with my own values, and I look forward to partnering with our teams across North America to support the business and help advance our strategic ambitions."

Over the past three years, Sodexo has lost at least six major college clients in the U.S. and has scaled back growth forecasts at least twice, pummeling its stock. » Page 6

DISTRESS MERGERS AND ACQUISITIONS

Ard Finance: Combining LME, Foreign Insolvency, and Chapter 15

By Corinne Ball

For some time, capital markets, including distressed investors, have been in search of returns globally but rely upon indentures providing that the governing law is New York law. Recent developments suggest that perhaps investors should be mindful of the limitations on choice of law. In today's restructuring world, foreign insolvency proceedings are increasingly serving as the core or main court proceeding for restructuring a global enterprise with a complex funded debt structure.

For bankruptcy historians, the recent restructuring of the Ardagh Group, a global metal and glass packaging conglomerate, enabled the controlling shareholder and senior lenders that provided new capital to implement a debt for equity exchange reserving a small return for unsecured debt, while concurrently providing value to equity. The outcome is reminiscent of the "equity squeeze outs" that dominated the U.S. bankruptcy world in the 1920s and early 1930s.

Such transactions effectively spurred Congress in 1938 (in the Chandler Act) to adopt the "absolute priority rule" precluding distributions to junior creditors or equity absent full payment of senior creditors. Yet, significantly, since then, chapter 11 and many offshore insolvency proceedings have navigated, in large part, from deference to negotiation and agreements among a majority of creditors to implement a restructuring binding the minority.

In the Ardagh Group restructuring, the liability management exercise (LME) and subsequent restructuring proceeding appears to have finessed what was essentially a "grab" by equity at the expense of holding company creditors. The process launched a U.K. LME that effected a new capital infusion ,aftera debt for equity exchange at the operating company with a cash payout to the controlling shareholder, reserving a small portion of the equity in the restructured Ardagh Group for the holding company debt at Ard Finance, followed by a judicial restructuring proceeding (JRP) under Luxembourg law for holding company Ard Finance.

That JRP remains pending, as does a related case filed on behalf of Ard Finance under chapter 15 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code seeking recognition of the JRP as a "foreign main proceeding" and a stay of creditor actions in the U.S..

Background

Ard Finance is the financing and investment holding company for the Ardagh Group. It is incorporated and headquartered in Luxembourg. Ard Finance is the 80+% owner of the Ardagh Group and the operating companies, as well as the 100% owner of Ard Group Finance Holdings S.A (AGFH), which owned the remaining 19+% equity in the Ardagh Group. All three entities are Luxembourg companies. The controlling shareholder of Ard Finance—Coulson—was an active participant in LME and restructuring activities undertaken for the Ardagh Group before the JRP for Ard Finance commenced.

Ard Finance and its subsidiary AGFH issued nearly $2 billion in notes that provided for payment in kind interest. These PIK Notes were secured by a pledge of the equity in Ardagh Group by Ard Finance and AGFH. Separately, the Ardagh Group issued in excess of $4.3 billion in debt. There were investors in Ardagh Group debt only, investors in the PIK Notes only, and investors in notes at both levels (the Cross Holders). Critically, the Cross Holders held the overwhelming majority of the PIK Notes.

In the Group Restructuring, the Ardagh Group sought $1.5 billion in new capital, with Coulson attempting to retain or recover value in the restructured Ardagh Group after the new capital infusion. Negotiations with the holders of Ardagh Group debt and the Cross Holders centered on the terms of a debt-for-equity exchange and the extent to which Coulson would receive or retain any value.

The Ardagh Group launched a revised exchange offer with a 90% acceptance threshold which provided that 92.5% of the equity of the Ardagh Group would be exchanged for the approximately $4.3 billion in Ardagh Group debt, the remaining 7.5% of the equity would be reserved for the PIK Noteholders, and Coulson would receive a cash payment of $300 million. The exchange offer did not achieve the 90% threshold, but was accepted by the Cross Holders holding in excess of 80% of the PIK Notes.

> The court determined that at this time, prior to any JRP plan or enforcement order, the objection was premature.

Voting and other procedures governing a Luxembourg insolvency proceeding provide that a binding restructuring plan can be approved with the consent of a majority of unsecured creditors. The consenting Cross Holders, who held approximately 80% of the PIK Notes, directed the collateral agent for the PIK Notes to foreclose on the equity, which was then held in a new entity (Equity Co.). Thus, when Ard Finance commenced a JRP, the PIK Notes were unsecured and Ard Finance no longer owned the equity in the Ardagh Group but instead held a reserved equity interest in the restructured Ardagh Group.

In all, there was a debt exchange by the Ardagh Group, negotiations with the holders of Ardagh Group debt and the Cross Holders, limited communication with the minority PIK Noteholders, foreclosure on the liens securing the PIK Notes, a $300 million payment to Coulson, and overwhelming acceptance (80%) by the Cross Holders of an anticipated JRP plan distributing the 7.5% equity reserve and allegedly abandoning any claims against Coulson.

Two weeks after the Luxembourg court granted Ard Finance's application to commence the JRP, Ard Finance paid a retainer to its U.S. counsel, which was held in a client trust account in New York. Shortly afterward, one of Ard Finance's officers, designated as its "foreign representative," filed a petition in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York seeking chapter 15 recognition of the JRP as a "foreign main proceeding."

Certain minority PIK noteholders objected to the petition, arguing that: (i) the actual or core restructuring occurred in the LME, an » Page 8

Mega-Grant of Stock Serves as Fitting Finale For Retiring CLO Who Helped Script AppLovin's Storybook Run

BY CHRIS O'MALLEY

MOBIL ad tech company AppLovin lavished its retiring legal chief with $13 million in pay last year, more than twice what she earned in 2024.

Chief administrative and legal officer Victoria "Tory" Valenzuela, and each of the company's three other named executives, received a $12.6 million stock award that vests over one year. The company does not have an executive cash bonus program.

The award made Valenzuela the second-highest paid executive at the Palo Alto, California-based company, behind chief technology officer Vasily Shikin, who earned $13.4 million, according to AppLovin's proxy statement filed Tuesday with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

"The award size placed her total compensation slightly above the 75th percentile of peer values for chief legal officers, which the Compensation Committee deemed appropriate in light of the expansion of responsibilities in July 2025 to cover both the legal and people organizations."

Valenzuela, 52, earned $5.9 million in 2024. She joined the company in May 2020 as chief legal officer and took on the additional role of chief administrative officer last July.

Though planning to step down on Aug. 1, Valenzuela has been nominated by the company ahead of its June 3 annual meeting to serve on its board of directors. Valenzuela joined AppLovin through its May 2020 acquisition of Palo Alto-based mobile strategy game company Machine Zone, where she was chief legal officer. Valenzuela had also been general counsel of Cypress Semiconductor, which was acquired by Infineon Technologies AG. Early in her career Valenzuela was a corporate and tech attorney at Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison and at Clifford Chance.

"She has expertise in legal and regulatory matters," particularly in ad tech, cybersecurity and data privacy matters, the proxy states.

The company also cited her experience in mergers and acquisitions, strategic transactions and in "human capital and talent development."

One of her stand-out achievements was helping AppLovin conduct its May 2021 IPO. With shares initially trading $80 a share, the company's market capitalization hit $29 billion. Today, its stock trades around $485, giving it a market cap of $164 billion.

AppLovin's marketing platform helps app developers and other businesses acquire users, monetize their platforms and grow audiences.

Growth remains torrid, with revenues rising 70% last year to $5.5 billion. Net income rocketed 111%, to $3.3 billion. When Valenzuela retires this summer, she will be succeeded by Corina Cacovean, who is now deputy general counsel for privacy, litigation and regulatory affairs. Cacovean has been with AppLovin for six years.

leader said. "Firms are now getting sanctioned for it so there is an economic concern as well. I think most law firm leaders would agree that the most significant issue is the impact on the reputation and brand of the firm."

The potential reputational damage goes beyond the firm's standing with its peers, of course. The public at large has also taken note of AI mistakes in the legal context and the responses from judges to those mistakes.

Sullivan & Cromwell and Boies Schiller are not the only major firms to catch heat for AI mistakes. K&L Gates and Latham & Watkins have both had their share of AI woes as well. When big firms like these fall victim to these types of mistakes, the name of the game is correction—both in the court and in the public eye.

Damage Control

Joshua Peck, principal at Joshua Peck Legal Communications, said in an interview that Sullivan & Cromwell should be issuing statements to the media and to the public about its citation error in the bankruptcy case. He said that would convey a dedication to taking responsibility for the error and ensuring it will not happen again.

Other than the public statement aspect, Peck said that Sullivan & Cromwell responded to the error in an ideal fashion.

"I think they did almost everything right," Peck said. "The senior person in charge, Andrew Dietderich, he took full responsibility for what went wrong, he identified the source of the problem, what had occurred that shouldn't have occurred, and he even gave credit to another law firm. All of that looks good and noble. I think they did most things right."

Representatives for Sullivan & Cromwell and Boies Schiller did not immediately respond to requests for comment.

Part of the problem behind these AI-related citation errors is the outsized hype for artificial intelligence as a technology. In an interview, a legal tech expert at a global firm said that people are wrongly believing the statements they hear about AI's abilities and, by extension, wrongly trusting the machine to be accurate.

"Given what some people were promising, people were believing that the tool was that powerful," the legal tech expert said. "This is the learning curve. You have to pick your use case wisely and be careful and do a lot of training"

Do the Work Yourself

An office managing partner at a law firm in London said that they expect many firms will be reviewing their AI policies following the Sullivan & Cromwell mistake, which is now one of the higher-profile instances of false citations being filed with a court due to AI reliance.

Gif Thornton, managing partner of Adams & Reese, said in an interview that he hopes AI development will soon leave hallucinations "in the rear-view," but added that until such a time comes it is important for law firm leaders to push for caution in AI adoption.

"Managing partners everywhere are sending the same message, which is that we have to embrace technology and use technology where it advances your practices, in the service of your clients, but you cannot allow it to substitute for your judgment and your thorough review," Thornton said.

Allowing the AI to do the work for you completely is the problem, a practice group leader in New York for a national firm said in an interview. The issue is not necessarily a lack of training on AI, the practice group leader said, but that attorneys need to understand that they still need to do the work of checking what the AI is spitting out rather than using the tools as a way to cut corners.

"Somebody manually has to go and look at every case and every quote, and make sure that it's there," the practice group leader said. "We always do that. We did that 10 years ago. We did that 15 years ago. I did that as a first year associate. In fact, I did that in law school when I was on law review and did cite checking. So, in some ways, that's not new. What's just new is the allure of the shortcut, you know?"

of any underlying statements or behavior by Judge B similar to those evidenced in the communications from Judge A. The judge asks if he/she must report either or both judges to the Commission on Judicial Conduct.

A judge must uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary (see 22 NYCRR 100.1), must always avoid even the appearance of impropriety (see 22 NYCRR 100.2) and must always act to promote public confidence in the judiciary's integrity and impartiality (see 22 NYCRR 100.2[A]). A judge who receives information indicating a "substantial likelihood" that another judge has committed a "substantial violation" of the Rules Governing Judicial Conduct must "take appropriate action" (22 NYCRR 100.3[D][1]).

We have previously summarized the applicable disciplinary standards in Opinion 21-19 (citations omitted):

> In general, we have advised that the judge who has first-hand knowledge of all the facts and persons involved in a particular situation is in the best position to determine whether there is a "substantial likelihood" that another judge has committed a "substantial violation" of the Rules. If the judge concludes that either of these two elements is missing, the judge need not take any action.
> Conversely, if a judge concludes that both prongs are met, the judge must take "appropriate action" (see id.).
> Even where the two-prong test is met, what action is "appropriate" under the circumstances is ordinarily left to the judge's discretion (see Opinion 22-113). But if the judge also concludes that the alleged violation, if proved, is so serious that it calls into question a judge's fitness to hold judicial office, then the judge is ethically obligated to report the matter to the Commission on Judicial Conduct (see e.g. Opinions 23-243; 22-115). By contrast, if a judge determines that the violation at issue is not so serious, or is merely technical in nature, it is within his/her discretion to take less severe, ethically appropriate action, such as counseling the judge or dealing with the matter administratively (see e.g. Opinions 22-113; 18-66).
> With respect to Judge A, the "substantial likelihood" prong is met because the inquiring judge received information about the alleged misconduct directly from Judge A. Moreover, based on these directly received communications, the inquiring judge has already concluded that the "substantial violation" prong is met. Thus, the two-prong test is satisfied and the judge must take "appropriate action." We need not analyze Judge A's alleged conduct in detail here, because the inquiring judge has already concluded that the communications received from Judge A raise "serious questions about Judge A's ability to be fair and impartial, as well as about [Judge A's] appreciation of [his/her] fundamental responsibilities as a judge." These concerns directly implicate questions of fitness for judicial office (see e.g. Opinions 22-115; 11-08). Therefore, the inquirer is ethically required to report Judge A to the Commission on Judicial Conduct so that the issue can be investigated (see id.).
> With respect to Judge B, by contrast, it is not clear that either prong is satisfied. The inquiring judge is "not aware" of any biased statements or actions by Judge B. At most, the inquiring judge has learned second-hand that Judge B objected to the same courtroom set-up as Judge A and similarly refused to call cases; but beyond that, the inquiring judge has no information whatsoever and has no duty to investigate. We conclude the inquiring judge need not take any action under Section 100.3(D)(1) with respect to Judge B. Instead, the inquiring judge has complete discretion whether to take, or not take, any steps at all concerning Judge B's conduct (see Opinion 18-66).

Trade Secret

information can be generated through straightforward use of generative AI by someone possessing ordinary skill in the field, it is more likely to fall outside the scope of trade secret protection.

That does not mean that all AI-assisted outputs are unprotectable. It does, however, narrow the field. Outputs generated through simple prompting using widely available data are unlikely to withstand scrutiny.

Not Secret at The Moment of Creation

Even where an AI-assisted output is sufficiently complex to avoid being deemed readily ascertainable, a separate issue arises: whether the information was ever created under conditions consistent with secrecy.

In many cases, the answer may be no. A recent study, User Privacy and Large Language Models: An Analysis of Frontier Developers 'Privacy Policies, by researchers at Stanford University, examined the privacy policies of six major LLM developers (Amazon, Anthropic, Google, OpenAI, Meta, and Microsoft), which together account for approximately 90% of the U.S. market.

The study found that, by default, user chat data, including inputs, outputs, and uploaded materials, is used for model training across all six platforms. While some platforms provide mechanisms to opt out of such use, those mechanisms are not consistently available and, in some cases, are difficult to navigate.

The study further found that several platforms permit human reviewers to access user conversations as part of model development, and that users are explicitly cautioned against entering confidential or sensitive information. Google, for example, advises users not to provide "any data you would not want a reviewer to see or Google to use to improve" its systems. At the same time, none of the reviewed platforms commit to consistently de-identifying user data prior to its use in training, and several are silent on the issue altogether.

Secrecy concerns are not limited to internal use or retention by the platform. Emerging research suggests that information disclosed to generative AI systems may, in some instances, be recoverable through interactions with the model itself.

A 2026 study by researchers at Stanford and Yale, Extracting Books from Production Language Models, examined whether models retain portions of their training data and can reproduce that information in their outputs. Analyzing several leading production models, including Claude 3.7 Sonnet, GPT-4.1, Gemini 2.5 Pro, and Grok 3, the study found that, even with system-level safeguards, models may memorize portions of their training data and, under certain conditions, reproduce them in response to user prompts.

In some cases, researchers were able to prompt the models to produce lengthy excerpts of text without using any sophisticated prompting workarounds, indicating that these systems can remember and repeat such material in ordinary use. These findings highlight a broader concern, that information developed in these systems may not be maintained in a manner consistent with befitting secrecy.

Against that backdrop, it becomes difficult to maintain that a user has any reasonable expectation of confidentiality when developing proprietary information using publicly accessible AI systems. A central tenet of New York trade secret law is that "a trade secret must first of all be secret." Ashland Mgmt. v. Janien, 82 N.Y.2d 395, 408 (1993). Where information is developed through systems that retain, process, and may disclose user inputs and outputs, whether by design or pursuant to user-authorized terms, the conditions necessary for secrecy may never be present absent appropriate safeguards to maintain the confidentiality of that information.

The recent decisions in United States v. Heppner, No. 25 Cr. 503, the Southern District of New York point in this direction. In Heppner, the court held that attorney-client privilege did not extend to communications with a publicly accessible AI chatbot. It emphasized not only that the defendant communicated with a third-party platform, but that the platform's privacy policy expressly provided that user inputs and outputs were collected, used for training, and could be disclosed to third parties, including in connection with litigation and to governmental authorities. In light of those disclosures, the court concluded that the communications were not confidential.

The court further noted that this view is consistent with other decisions in the district. Citing In re OpenAI, Inc. Copyright Infringement Litigation, the court observed that users "do not have substantial privacy interests" in their conversations with publicly accessible AI platforms, where those communications are voluntarily disclosed and retained in the ordinary course of business.

That reasoning is not merely theoretical. In a consolidated multidistrict litigation in the Southern District of New York involving claims brought by The New York Times and others against OpenAI and Microsoft, the court ordered the production of 20 million user chat logs in anonymized form. While anonymization may address certain privacy concerns, it does not eliminate the reality that user interactions with AI systems may be subject to disclosure in litigation.

In practice, however, disclosure does not require a subpoena or court order. At various times, AI developers have made user chat content accessible beyond the original user. For example, OpenAI previously allowed users to share conversations via public links that were indexed by search engines, a feature that was later removed following public criticism.

Similarly, research has shown that shared conversations from other platforms have been made available for indexing, even where identifying information was removed. These practices reflect the broader reality that user inputs and outputs may be stored, processed, and, in some circumstances, exposed in ways that extend beyond the user's control.

Although these examples arise in different contexts, they point in the same direction. Where users disclose information to AI systems that retain, use, and in some cases publish or produce that information, courts may be increasingly reluctant to treat those interactions as confidential. In that environment, arguments that AI-assisted outputs were developed under conditions of secrecy may face significant headwinds.

Taken together, the trajectory is clear. Where proprietary information is disclosed to and processed by publicly accessible AI systems, courts may be increasingly reluctant to treat that information as confidential at all. In that environment, it becomes difficult to maintain that the resulting output was ever secret in the first place.

So How Do Businesses Preserve Trade Secret Protection for AI-Developed Information?

Generative AI does not eliminate trade secret protection, but it changes what businesses must do when they rely on these systems to develop proprietary information. The challenge is not simply maintaining secrecy after the fact. It is ensuring that information developed through AI qualifies as a trade secret in the first place.

For larger, well-resourced organizations, the solution may appear straightforward in concept: develop and deploy internal AI systems and restrict use to those controlled environments. By doing so, businesses can maintain greater control over how proprietary information is used, retained, and protected, and reduce the risks associated with relying on publicly accessible platforms.

For most businesses, however, that approach is not realistic. They will continue to rely, at least in part, on third-party generative AI systems to develop proprietary information. For those businesses, preserving trade secret protection for those outputs will require a more layered approach.

First, businesses should control the environment in which AI-assisted development occurs. Where proprietary information is created using publicly accessible AI platforms, the threshold issue is whether that information is ever confidential in the first place. Businesses should carefully evaluate the terms governing any AI system they use, including whether inputs and outputs are retained, used for training, or subject to disclosure. Where possible, they should opt out of training and avoid platforms that do not provide meaningful control over how user data is handled.

Second, businesses should be deliberate in how they use AI to generate outputs. Because the "readily ascertainable" inquiry turns on the effort required to reproduce the information, outputs generated through simple prompting using widely available data are unlikely to qualify. Businesses should instead focus on developing outputs through more complex, iterative processes, including refined prompting strategies, repeated testing and adjustment, and the integration of proprietary inputs or internal knowledge. In many cases, the process used to generate consistently superior outputs may itself be the most defensible trade secret.

Third, businesses should limit what they disclose to AI systems during the development process. Even where a business has existing trade secrets, incorporating that information into prompts without adequate safeguards may undermine its protection. Businesses should adopt clear internal policies governing what information may be used in AI systems, under what conditions, and through which approved tools.

They may also consider limiting access to proprietary information to only those who need it. The focus should not only be on protecting outputs, but on preserving the confidentiality of the inputs used to generate those outputs.

Finally, businesses should recognize that AI-generated outputs are less likely to be protectable when they are produced through standardized interactions. Incorporating human judgment, modification, and refinement into AI-assisted development may help distinguish the resulting information and reduce the likelihood that it can be replicated through ordinary use of similar tools.

67.8% of its 2025 grads to Big Law.

The 2026 Go-To Law Schools: Big Law survey ranks the top 50 law schools by percentage of 2025 J.D. graduates who went on to secure positions at Am Law 200, which ranks the top 200 U.S. law firms by gross revenue. This methodology differs from the previous year, when law schools were asked about the number of graduates who went on to law firms within the NLJ 500, which ranks law firms by head count.

Despite the smaller data set this year, the results overall are quite similar.

This year, schools in the top 50 sent between 15.7% and 75.6% of grads to Am Law 200 firms, compared to last year, when the top 50 schools sent between 20% and 71.9% of their graduates to associate positions at NLJ 500 law firms. This was nearly double the lower threshold from 2024, when the bottom-ranked school in the top 50 sent just 10.6%, and up to 65.2%, of its students to the top 100 law firms of the NLJ 500.

A total of 14 law schools sent 45% or more of their grads to Big Law this year.

The top 10 this year largely saw minimal shifts in rank, partly driven by Columbia Law's re-entry at the top of the list and the absence of University of Southern California Gould School of Law, which landed in fourth last year but declined to participate this year. After Columbia Law and Northwestern Law, University of Pennsylvania Carey Law School and University of Virginia School of Law each fell one position to third and fourth, respectively, while New York University School of Law and University of Chicago Law School traded places for fifth and sixth. University of California, Berkeley School of Law held its position at seventh (up from 13th in 2024), but University of California, Los Angeles School of Law, which had tied with Berkeley Law for seventh last year, fell one place to eighth (up from 12th in 2024).

No. 3 Penn Carey Law sent 66.9% of its 2025 graduates to Big Law, with No. 8-ranked UCLA Law sending 55.7%, compared to 67.1% and 57.8% last year, respectively.

Ninth place, however, was taken over by Vanderbilt University Law School, up from 13th last year, as Notre Dame Law School fell out of that position to 19th; while Georgetown University Law Center jumped into 10th from 14th, knocking Boston College Law School to 11th. Vanderbilt sent 55.6% of its graduates to Big Law this year, and Georgetown sent 53.8%, compared to 51.8% and 50.2% last year, respectively.

Notre Dame's share of students who went to Big Law shrank significantly, with 93 of its graduates, 56.4%, going to 63 Big Law firms last year, including 52 firms in the Am Law 200, and only 55 of its graduates, 33.5%, going to 35 Am Law 200 firms this year.

Notre Dame did not respond to a request for comment on this year's results.

For schools that sent between 45.4% and 48.6% of grads to Big Law include Boston College Law School, ranked at No. 11 (10th last year); Fordham University School of Law, 12th (11th last year); Boston University School of Law, 13th, up from 16th last year; and Washington University School of Law, 14th (12th last year)—as compared to being ranked at 15, 18, 17 and 16, respectively, in 2024.

Schools that made notable jumps include Washington and Lee University School of Law ranked at 16th up from 21st last year, having sent 37.3% of its 2025 grads to Big Law; SMU Dedman School of Law moved up to 17th from 23rd last year, with 36.9% of its grads sent to Big Law; University of Colorado Law School sent 23.6% of its grads to Big Law ranking at No. 31 this year, up from 36th last year; and University of Minnesota Law School came in 32nd, up from 39th, having sent 23.4% to Big Law.

Additionally, Cardozo School of Law rose to 34th from 42nd last year; University of Georgia School of Law rose to 36th from 40th; St. John's University School of Law rose to 38th from 45th; Case Western Reserve University School of Law rose to 43rd from 48th; University of San Diego School of Law rose to 44th from 49th; and Seton Hall University School of Law rose to 47th after falling below the top 50 last year.

However, some schools fell significantly on the list. Tulane University Law School dropped to 45th from 27th, sending 19.2% of 2025 grads to Big Law, compared to 31.7% of 2024 grads. Tulane sent its 2025 graduates to a total of 25 Am Law 200 firms, compared to 36th the year prior.

Tulane Law sent more 2025 grads to government jobs, public interest positions and clerkships—69 students, 32%, as compared to 55 students, 25%, of its 2024 grads, according to employment data on the school's webpage. Had those 14 students gone into Big Law, Tulane's ranking would have been almost identical to last year's.

The same applies to Santa Clara University School of Law, which dropped to 49th from 43rd, because the school sent 32 (16%) 2025 grads to government and public interest jobs plus clerkships, compared to 21 (10%) 2024 grads to those same positions, according to data obtained from the school's webpage. Had those 11 students gone to Big Law, Santa Clara's ranking would have been in the mid-30s.

Meanwhile, Texas A&M University School of Law fell to 46th this year after coming in 33rd last year, with 18.6% of 2025 grads going Big Law versus 28.1% of 2024 grads. Texas A&M sent 2025 graduates to 24 Am Law 200 firms, compared to 21 the year prior.

According to Texas A&M Law School's data, the difference is that the school simply sent fewer students to Big Law: sending 32 of its 2025 grads to firms with 51+ lawyers as compared to 62 2024 grads to firms of the same size. However, the law school graduated 124 J.D.s in 2025 compared to 178 in 2024, according to school data.

Two other schools saw declines: Northeastern University School of Law dropped to 40th from 31st, and Temple University Beasley School of Law fell to 41st from 34th.

Only one school that was in the top 50 last year didn't make it this year, by only one spot — Georgia State University College of Law fell out of 50th place to land at No. 51 this year.

Corporate Update / Expert Analysis

Investment

extrajudicial proceeding; (ii) given the ramifications of the LME Group Restructuring, there was little or no economic purpose for the JRP; (iii) there was no real participation by Ard Finance creditors; and (iv) equity should not receive value without first paying creditors. The PIK Noteholders also challenged the Cross Holders vote on the grounds that those Cross Holders became corporate insiders as a consequence of the LME Global Restructuring.

The Analysis

At this juncture, the bankruptcy court was only asked to recognize the JRP as a foreign main proceeding and to deal with discovery requests by the objecting minority PIK Noteholders. In its ruling on the recognition petition (see In re ARD Finance, S.A., 2026 WL 817458 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. Mar. 25, 2026)), the bankruptcy court first addressed the eligibility of Ard Finance to be a debtor in a chapter 15 case, which under section 109(a) of the Bankruptcy Code and Second Circuit precedent, requires that a foreign debtor have property in the U.S.

The bankruptcy court determined that Ard Finance was an eligible chapter 15 debtor because it had an undrawn attorney retainer in a U.S. bank account, as well as contract rights governing U.S. dollar-denominated debt subject to a New York choice of law and forum selection clause. The court also determined that venue was proper in the Southern District of New York.

Turning to the objection that the JRP was not a "collective proceeding" (a requirement for chapter 15 recognition) due to the alleged lack of judicial supervision over the LME Group Restructuring and the alleged failure of the JRP to provide for creditor participation, the bankruptcy court focused on the facts presented by the chapter 15 debtor regarding the JRP. Based upon the declarations provided and considering the objection, the bankruptcy court concluded that the JRP was a judicially-supervised proceeding administered in accordance with statutory standards, including classification of creditors, voting procedures and other protections.

The bankruptcy court also observed that the Luxembourg court's preliminary refusal to review the treatment of minority PIK Noteholders in the LME Group Restructuring was not fatally prejudicial to creditor interests because the PIK Noteholders had the right to participate in the proceeding by voting against the proposed treatment of their claims under a JRP plan and the ability to appeal any order confirming the JRP plan. The bankruptcy court ultimately held the JRP was a "foreign proceeding" entitled to chapter 15 recognition.

While the court would also ultimately address the objections premised on the limitations on relief set forth in chapter 15 and the public policy exception to chapter 15 relief, the analysis focused on whether the JRP was a foreign main proceeding triggering automatic protections, such as a stay of litigation, for the chapter 15 debtor.

Turning first to the anchoring determination of whether Luxembourg was Ard Finance's center of main interests (COMI), the court explained that Luxembourg was its country of incorporation, as well as the location of its registered office, books and records, directors, board meetings and some of its bank accounts, all of which supported a finding that Ard Finance's COMI was located in Luxembourg.

The court also determined that the officer designated in the JRP as the foreign representative was "a person or body," as required for chapter 15 recognition, and that the petition and accompanying documents were properly filed and presented. The bankruptcy court concluded that the JRP be recognized as a foreign main proceeding.

After determining that those statutory requirements for recognition under chapter 15 were met, the court continued its analysis of the PIK noteholders' objections premised on the statutory limitations on chapter 15 relief, notably the dual approach limitations on chapter 15 relief—in particular, that the JRP did not sufficiently protect U.S. creditors and was manifestly contrary to the public policy of the United States and hence chapter 15 relief was not appropriate.

The PIK Noteholders' objection to chapter 15 relief focused on the failure of the JRP and the restructuring plan to sufficiently protect U.S. creditors and that its provisions were manifestly contrary to U.S. public policy even though the plan had not yet been approved by the Luxembourg court and that enforcement of such a JRP order was not being sought. The bankruptcy court explained that the PIK Noteholders' objection anticipated outcomes that might not necessarily occur.

Even so, the court nevertheless considered whether the facts presented in the chapter 15 case before it contravened the limitations on the powers of the Chapter 15 court to grant relief, particularly the limitation on the court to grant relief only if the interests of creditors are "sufficiently protected." The court explained that "sufficient protection" under section 1522 encompasses three principles: (i) just treatment of all stakeholders; (ii) protection of U.S. creditors against prejudice and inconvenience in asserting their claims; and (iii) distribution of proceeds substantially in accordance with the order prescribed by U.S. law.

Similarly, the court considered the PIK Noteholders contention that section 1506 precluded any relief respecting the JRP, submitting that the procedure was "manifestly contrary to U.S. public policy." The focus of the court's analysis was the admonition that the word "manifestly" should be narrowly interpreted because the word "manifestly" in international usage restricts the public policy exception to the most fundamental policies of the United States.

The court relied on the legislative history accompanying the enactment of chapter 15 and considered precedent which identified the determining inquiry as whether the foreign insolvency laws or procedural protections for creditors are "repugnant" to U.S. law, not the misconduct or bad faith of the petitioners.

The analysis also took into account, as also suggested by the legislative history, the official Guide to the Enactment of the Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency, which also underscored that the purpose of the expression "manifestly" is to emphasize that the public policy exception should be interpreted restrictively and invoked under exceptional circumstances concerning matters of fundamental importance.

The bankruptcy court also pointed to Second Circuit precedent which favored comity if proceedings reflect a course of a civilized jurisprudence, meaning fair and impartial, recognizing that though the foreign approach might be different from the approach under U.S. law, it does not mean that the foreign approach is wrong.

> Voting and other procedures governing a Luxembourg insolvency proceeding provide that a binding restructuring plan can be approved with the consent of a majority of unsecured creditors.

Having established the parameters of the legal analysis, the court turned to the facts of this JRP, which included declarations which set forth for the JRP the statutory requirements, the division of creditors into classes, the robust voting procedures, including that foreign creditors may not be treated less favorably than Luxembourg creditors, also establishing that the JRP is sufficiently judicial in nature and involves the exercise of supervisory powers of the court, enabling the legal determination that the JRP is a collective proceeding meeting the requirements for a foreign proceeding to be recognized.

These facts also demonstrated that the JRP met the three principles establishing that the JRP provided sufficient protection. The court determined that at this time, prior to any JRP plan or enforcement order, the objection was premature. The court also recognized and rejected the primary thrust of the minority PIK Noteholders' objection which was that the JRP is manifestly contrary to public policy because the JRP has not and perhaps will not examine the pre-JRP out-of-court LME Group Restructuring, concluding that such limitation on the JRP, standing alone, does not indicate that the Luxembourg proceeding is contrary to U.S. public policy. The minority PIK noteholders, however, remain free to raise objections when and if the chapter 15 debtor seeks enforcement of a JRP plan.

Conclusion

There are at least three takeaways from Ard Finance for distressed investors. First and foremost, restructuring today is global, with every jurisdiction being a potential venue for a foreign proceeding, which demands knowledge and consideration of the foreign law provisions and impacts, favorable or unfavorable. Second, comity is the general rule, with the public policy exception being narrowly construed and confined to what is "repugnant" to U.S. law.

Third, courts apply the requirements and standards of chapter 15 with respect to the foreign proceeding for which recognition is sought, not the actions of the foreign debtor (or its foreign representative) or conduct preceding the commencement of the foreign proceeding, except to consider improper COMI "manipulation." Absent such manipulation, if there are alleged wrongdoings that occurred outside of the foreign proceeding, investors cannot rely on chapter 15 to encompass a review of such allegations.

It is noteworthy that the governing law in Luxembourg enabling the JRP was only one year old when Ard Finance filed its JRP petition. As presented to the bankruptcy court, the Luxembourg law governing the JRP largely adopts the procedural approach of a U.S. reorganization under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. At the time the JRP commenced, Ard Finance had a single class of unsecured creditors and a restructuring agreement whereby 80+% of those unsecured creditors agreed to accept 7.5% of the equity reserved for the PIK Noteholders in the LME Group Restructuring.

There is nothing novel, let alone "repugnant," about the proposition that in a reorganization proceeding a substantial majority of a class of unsecured creditors can vote to accept a plan providing for less than full payment of their claims while providing a return to equity, with that vote to accept the plan becoming binding on dissenting creditors. The alleged wrongdoings in Ard Finance occurred primarily outside the JRP and principally concerned the actions of Ard Finance's former controlling shareholder, Coulson.

In the context of a petition for chapter 15 recognition, the bankruptcy court never considered the anticipated release of claims against Coulson under a JRP plan, but again, the release of third parties with the consent of a substantial majority of unsecured creditors (the only creditors in Ard Finance are the PIK Noteholders) is not a novel proposition in a foreign proceeding that is recognized under chapter 15.

The court's ruling on chapter 15 recognition in Ard Finance has two sets of guideposts. The first concerns the requirements for chapter 15 recognition. The second relates to a U.S. bankruptcy court's statutory power to provide "additional assistance" as provided in section 1521 specifying the kinds of relief that may be granted upon recognition subject to the limitations of section 1522(mandating protection of stakeholder interests), and the public policy exception set forth in section 1506.

Notably, these guideposts look to the particular facts presented in the chapter 15 case to determine whether the recognition requirements have been satisfied and whether the limitations are relevant and applicable.

Indeed, this case, together with the recent ruling of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York in the Crédito Real chapter 15 case affirming a bankruptcy court order recognizing and enforcing non-consensual non-debtor releases in a court-approved Mexican restructuring proceeding as not being barred by the public policy exception, make clear that investors should not expect the chapter 11 rules to apply in chapter 15. *See U.S. Int'l Dev. Benefits

This was controversial—some thought it was too high, some too low—but in January 2026 EPA stopped using this or any figure, and essentially valued each human life as worth $0 in its analyses.

There are serious questions about the legality of EPA's new approach to stop quantifying and monetizing environmental benefits. As Dean Revesz has pointed out, considering only the costs and not the benefits of a regulation that EPA wants to rescind "is a paradigmatic example of 'arbitrary and capricious' conduct prohibited by the Administrative Procedure Act."

The Ninth Circuit held, also in the context of motor vehicle standards, that uncertainty over the value of a benefit is not a reason for assigning it a value of zero. Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. Nat'l Highway Traffic Safety Admin., 538 F.3d 1172, 1198-1203 (9th Cir. 2008). Justice Antonin Scalia, writing for the majority in a Clean Air Act case, indicated that a regulation that "does significantly more harm than good" cannot stand. Michigan v. EPA, 576 U.S. 743 (2015). Ignoring the good and looking only at the costs would be—and has become—an excuse for revoking all manner of regulations.

Attacks on Science

The way to resolve scientific uncertainty is to conduct more scientific research. The Trump administration is aggressively doing the opposite in what Science magazine called "the Category 5 hurricane that struck U.S. science in 2025." This is taking numerous forms, as described below. Many of these actions, and numerous others, are reported in the Silencing Science Tracker, an ongoing joint project of the Sabin Center for Climate Change Law and the Climate Science Legal Defense Fund.

Personnel—More than 10,000 science and engineering Ph.D.s have left the federal government since the start of this administration. Departures have outnumbered new hires by a ratio of 11 to one. Overall the workforces of the federal environmental, public lands, and natural resources agencies have decreased by 41,224 employees—a decline of 20.6%—between September 2024 and December 2025.

Many of the remaining employees are demoralized and afraid of speaking out for fear of losing their jobs, with good reason. Approximately 160 EPA employees publicly signed a letter to Administrator Zeldin and members of Congress protesting the politicization of science; EPA fired several of them and six are suing, saying their First Amendment rights were violated. In the words of one longtime National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) climate scientist who angrily quit her job, "NASA is throttling the scientific pipeline and diminishing our ability to see and understand our planet."

Many graduate and postdoctoral students from other countries who would like to study and work in the U.S. have been scared away by uncertainty over funding and by current visa and immigration policies. Canadian, European, Chinese, and Indian universities are successfully recruiting U.S. scientists. A March 2025 poll of U.S. scientists by Nature magazine found that 75% of those who responded were considering leaving the U.S.

Some of the mass firings by Elon Musk's DOGE were quickly seen as unwise. The National Weather Service (NWS) lost more than 500 meteorologists and other specialists; a few months later NWS said it would refill many of these positions, but how quickly this will actually happen is unclear.

Agency leadership—Cabinet, subcabinet and other political positions are now occupied by individuals who, following the lead of President Trump, deny, or came to deny after joining the administration, the severe risks of climate change and the importance of dealing with it. This includes EPA, the Interior, Energy, and Treasury departments, the Office of Management and Budget, and elsewhere. Many political-level positions remain unfilled.

Study bodies—The U.S. has withdrawn from more than 60 international institutions, notably including the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), and the Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform in Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services.

It has also dismissed all the scientists and others working on the National Climate Assessment, the congressionally mandated periodic studies about the impacts of climate change on the U.S. EPA dissolved its Office of Research and Development and is requiring some of its remaining scientists to relocate to other cities. The administration has disbanded numerous federal advisory committees of scientists, or filled them exclusively with industry representatives.

It is dismantling the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Colorado, a premier place for climate studies (an effort now in litigation), and evicted another one, NASA's Goddard Institute for Space Studies, from its offices in New York, forcing its scientists to scrounge for other workplaces. The National Academies of Science, Engineering and Medicine prepared for a "fairly radical downsizing" of its staff after a loss of much federal funding. The Director of National Intelligence, Tulsi Gabbard, eliminated the group that prepared the quadrennial Global Trends report, which in recent years has been identifying climate change as a major threat to national security.

The Forest Service is closing 57 of its 77 research facilities, which study how wildfires, drought, pests, and global warming are putting pressure on forests. In the U.S. Geological Survey, 25 water science centers were scheduled to be closed. The Department of Energy threatened to withdraw from the International Energy Agency (IEA) unless it dropped its focus on climate change, but then learned that the IEA could play a central role in coordinating the release of oil from many countries' strategic reserves to very partially address the Strait of Hormuz crisis.

Withdrawal from the IPCC is especially noteworthy. It is the United Nations body that prepares the most authoritative summaries and assessments of climate science. Not only did it win the Nobel Peace Prize in 2007, but it has been cited in 49 decisions of U.S. federal and state courts, and disputed by none. All four of the major climate rulings from international tribunals issued in 2024 and 2025 relied on it heavily—the International Court of Justice, the European Court of Human Rights, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, and the International Tribunal on the Law of the Sea. The Trump administration has barred federal scientists from attending IPCC meetings or working on its reports.

One effort to ignore established climate science went especially poorly. In July 2025 the Secretary of Energy hired five well-known climate contrarians to create a "Climate Working Group." They hastily prepared a report downplaying the risks of climate change for EPA's use in revoking the endangerment finding. The National Academies of Science quickly prepared its own report debunking that report, as did many other scientists. A federal court found that the Climate Working Group had been formed in violation of Federal Advisory Committee Act, and the group was disbanded.

> Mentions of climate change on many other websites have been removed. The EPA ordered the scientists in its Office of Water to halt publication of new research.

When EPA formally withdrew the endangerment finding, it did not rely on the Group's report or any other reports questioning climate science, and instead relied entirely on legal arguments, which are now being challenged in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. However, the report is still posted on the Department of Energy's website, and both Administrator Zeldin and Secretary Wright continue to be dismissive the severity of climate change in their public speeches.

Data gathering—The administration has proposed to halt the Greenhouse Gas Reporting Program, which requires companies to report their GHG emissions and has played a central role in climate policymaking and regulation. The Securities and Exchange Commission abandoned defense of its regulation, adopted under President Biden, to require publicly traded companies to report on their GHG emissions. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) has suspended work on its extreme rainfall database and has shut down its annual compilation of billion-dollar weather and climate disasters.

The government terminated NOAA's Arctic sea ice dataset and is seeking to shut down the Mauna Loa laboratory in Hawaii, which conducts crucial climate observations, including those leading to the famous Keeling Curve. NASA has taken steps to prematurely decommission several satellites that monitor carbon dioxide and other parameters, while the Department of Defense has stopped providing atmospheric and oceanic data from satellites to scientists. The National Weather Service has reduced weather balloon operations. The library at the NASA Goddard Space Flight Center is closing. In March 2026 a lawsuit was filed against NOAA for allegedly hiring an unqualified contractor to collect environmental data.

The insurance industry relies heavily on climate data and projections in assessing risk and pricing policies; some in it are among those already expressing alarm about these developments.

Grants—The grants for climate and other environmental and medical research at many universities have been cancelled, often on the grounds that the universities had diversity, equity, and inclusion policies that the current administration disfavors, or that the universities allegedly failed to deal sufficiently with antisemitism. Many of these grant cancellations are currently being litigated.

New grants on disfavored subjects are not being issued. The federal environmental, natural resources, and public lands agencies obligated $36.8 billion in project grants in fiscal year 2025, a 44.3% decrease from fiscal year 2024. Additionally, grants and grant renewals from the National Science Foundation (NSF) have declined drastically. Researchers seeking federal funding have been advised to avoid using terms like "climate change" and "global warming" (as well as "environmental justice" and "diversity") in their grant applications.

Budget—The Fiscal Year 2027 budget, which the White House released on April 3, 2026, would increase the military budget by approximately 40% (to $1.5 trillion) but decrease the EPA budget by 52%, the NSF budget by 54.5%, and the NOAA budget by 27.42%, and would zero out the budget for the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences. It would divert much of the Department of Energy budget from renewables and energy efficiency to fossil fuels and artificial intelligence.

The final budget is in the hands of Congress; last year Congress largely rejected similarly deep cuts to climate funding. Already, in 2025, the National Institutes of Health announced that they would no longer fund studies of the health effects of climate change.

Suppressed studies—The administration terminated work on the National Nature Assessment, a report on the state of America's land, water, and wildlife. The report was almost finished, and many of the scientists who were preparing it are continuing that work on their own and have published a draft for public comment and scientific review. EPA also withheld publication of the Inventory of U.S. Greenhouse Gas Emissions and Sinks, though it was ultimately released after a Freedom of Information Act request from the Environmental Defense Fund.

Similarly, the U.S. Department of Agriculture took down climate-related webpages but restored them in the face of a lawsuit brought by Earthjustice. Within a month after Trump's second inauguration, almost 3,400 datasets were removed from the U.S. government's open data site, data.gov.

Two key climate websites, NOAA's climate.gov and the U.S. Global Change Research Program's globalchange.gov, have been taken down; much of the information that was on those sites still exists online but it is more difficult to find, and most of the staff that maintained climate.gov has been fired. Mentions of climate change on many other websites have been removed. The EPA ordered the scientists in its Office of Water to halt publication of new research.

Conclusion

The Trump administration has said it will revoke or weaken many environmental regulations, but most of these rulemakings are still pending. We do not yet know the full extent to which benefits and science are being ignored in formal decisions, or whether these actions will hold up in court. However, three things are already apparent. First, the disregarding of the benefits of rules the administration dislikes has become pervasive.

Second, the disregard of benefits and the degradation of scientific research are consistent with the administration's desire to maximize both the demand for and the supply of fossil fuels. Third, the assault on the scientific enterprise will do lasting damage to public health, environmental quality, the economy, and America's standing in the world.

Rules For The Special Election Part

Proceedings brought by Orders to Show Cause to validate or to invalidate designating petitions for the Tuesday, June 23, 2026 Primary Election, required to be commenced on or before Monday, April 20, 2026, or within three (3) business days after a petition is invalidated by the Board of Elections in the City of New York, shall be initially returnable before the Honorable Matthew V. Grieco, on Friday, April 24, 2026, unless the Judge directs otherwise, at 10:00 a.m., in Part 30, Courtroom 623, located at 111 Centre Street, New York, NY 10007. The calendar call must be answered either by counsel or by the self-represented litigant(s) if not represented by an attorney, who must be ready for assignment on the return date. Non-lawyer "Representatives" of the parties are not permitted to answer the calendar. The parties must comply with the filing requirements of CPLR 304.

On the return date, all counsel and parties appearing self-represented shall advise either the Clerk of the Part, or the Special Referee assigned to the case, of their addresses and telephone numbers. Proof of Service of the Order to Show Cause, as well as any interposed Counterclaims or Answers, shall be filed either with the Clerk of the Part or the Special Referee (not the County Clerk), or uploaded to NYSCEF (if e-filed) on that date.

Specifications of objections to a designating or a nominating petition previously served and filed, pursuant to the Rules of the Board of Elections, need not be filed with the Clerk of the Part, or uploaded to NYSCEF (if e-filed).

Specifications of objections not previously served and filed with the Board of Elections shall be served upon all opposing parties and filed with the Clerk of the Part or uploaded to NYSCEF (if e-filed), no later than 10:00 a.m., on Friday, April 24, 2026, unless the Judge directs otherwise. Failure to serve and file any such specifications of objections shall be considered and deemed a waiver, and further proof or evidence of such specifications shall be precluded.

In any proceeding by an aggrieved candidate to invalidate a designating or nominating petition, a bill of particulars as to the specifications of objections shall be served upon all opposing parties and filed with the Clerk of the Part or uploaded to NYSCEF (if e-filed), no later than 10:00 a.m., on Friday, April 24, 2026, unless the Judge directs otherwise. Failure to serve and file a bill of particulars shall be considered and deemed a waiver, and further proof or evidence of the specifications shall be precluded.

In any proceeding or matter alleging a question of residency of a candidate, a complete written offer of proof shall be served upon all opposing parties and filed with the Clerk of the Part or the Special Referee on the return date or uploaded to NYSCEF (if e-filed). The written offer of proof shall specify: [i] the reasons the petitioner believes the address where the candidate actually resides, or that the candidate does not reside at the address stated in the designating/nominating petition; and [ii] the names of any witnesses which the party intends to call to testify regarding the residency issue. Failure to serve and file this offer of proof shall be considered and deemed a waiver, and further proof or evidence of residency shall be precluded.

A complete written offer of proof, in all matters alleging a question of fraud, including a statement as to the number of witnesses expected to be called, the identification of each such witness (by name, address, volume, page and line) and the status of each such witness (e.g., candidate, signatory, subscribing witness, notary public, etc.), shall be served upon all opposing parties and filed with the Clerk of the Part, or uploaded to NYSCEF (if e-filed), no later than 10:00 a.m., on Friday, April 24, 2026, unless the Judge directs otherwise. Failure to serve and file such offer of proof shall be considered and deemed a waiver, and further proof or evidence of fraud shall be precluded.

Proceedings brought by Order to Show Cause to validate a designating or nominating petition, required to be commenced within three (3) business days of a determination of its invalidity by the Board of Elections, shall be returnable either on Friday, April 24, 2026, unless the Judge directs otherwise, at 10:00 a.m. in Part 30, Courtroom 623, located at 111 Centre Street, New York, NY 10007, or at such other time and place as required by the date on which the Board of Elections made its final determination.

In preparing their proposed Order to Show Cause, petitioners are directed to refrain from drafting proposed language directing the Board of Elections to produce in court, on the return date, all of the petition volumes, specifications of objections, and prima facie findings. Rather, petitioners are directed to draft proposed language calling for the Board of Elections to produce in court, on the return date, only the necessary documents. The balance of the Board of Elections documents can be produced at a later stage of the litigation.

The Appellate Division, First Department, has scheduled and reserved Tuesday, May 12, 2026, and if necessary, Wednesday, May 13, 2026, to consider appeals related to the Tuesday, June 23, 2026 primary election.
